

About the authors

Andy Pike is the Henry Daysh Professor of Regional Development Studies in the Centre for Urban and Regional Development Studies (CURDS), Newcastle University, UK. His research interests are in the geographical political economy of local, regional and urban development and policy. He is widely published in international journals, author of Origination: The Geographies of Brands and Branding (Wiley-Blackwell, 2015), co-author of Local and Regional Development (Routledge, 2017, 2nd edition) (with Andrés Rodríguez-Pose and John Tomaney), editor of Brands and Branding Geographies (Edward Elgar Publishing, 2011) and Whither Regional Studies? (Routledge, 2009), and co-editor of Handbook of Local and Regional Development (Routledge, 2011) and Local and Regional Development – Major Works (Routledge, 2015) (with Andrés Rodríguez-Pose and John Tomaney). He has undertaken research projects for the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD), United Nations-International Labour Organisation (UN-ILO), European Commission, UK Government and national, regional and local institutions. He is currently working on city economic evolution and adaptation, manufacturing renaissance in industrial regions, inclusive growth, and the governance of local and regional development. He was Director of CURDS (2012–17), an editor of Regional Studies (2005–13) and the founding Director of the Postgraduate Local and Regional Development programmes in CURDS (2002–14). He is an Academician of the UK Academy of Social Sciences and a Fellow of the Regional Studies Association.

Peter O'Brien is Executive Director of Yorkshire Universities, the regional voice for higher education in Yorkshire and the Humber. He is also a Senior Research Associate in the Centre for Urban and Regional Development Studies (CURDS), Newcastle University. His research interests lie in the governance of local and regional development. He has held senior policy roles in local, city-regional and regional government. Previously, he was Deputy Local Growth Consultant at the Higher Education Funding Council for England (HEFCE), Interim Head of the North East Local Enterprise Partnership, Director of Tyne and Wear City Region, Assistant Chief Executive of the North East Assembly, and Regional Policy Officer at the Trades Union Congress (TUC). The contents of this book do not reflect the formal views of Yorkshire Universities or any other employer Peter O'Brien has worked for.

Tom Strickland completed the work that underpins his contributions to this book as a PhD Researcher at the Centre for Urban and Regional Development Studies (CURDS), Newcastle University. His research interests are centred on approaches to funding and financing urban infrastructure in the UK and across the globe.

Graham Thrower is the Head of Infrastructure and Investment at the smart cities and innovation consultancy Urban Foresight. He is also the Chairman of NEL Fund Managers. His research interests reflect an institutional approach to political economy informed by the economic geography of investment markets. He was formerly a Board Director of One North East (the Regional Development Agency for the North East of England) and a Managing Director of Citigroup. He is a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society. The contents of this book do not reflect the formal views of Urban Foresight or any other employer Graham Thrower has worked for.

John Tomaney is Professor of Urban and Regional Planning in the Bartlett School of Planning, University College London. Formerly, he was Henry Daysh Professor of Regional Development Studies and Director of the Centre for Urban and Regional Development Studies (CURDS) at Newcastle University and Professor of Regional Studies at Monash University. He is an Academician of the UK Academy of Social Sciences, a Fellow of the Regional Australia Institute and holds visiting positions at the University of New South Wales, University College Dublin and Newcastle University (UK). He is the co-author of Local and Regional Development (Routledge, 2017) (with Andy Pike and Andrés Rodríguez-Pose), and co-editor of Handbook of Local and Regional Development (Routledge, 2011) and Local and Regional Development – Major Works (Routledge, 2015) (with Andy Pike and Andrés Rodríguez-Pose). He has undertaken work for international organisations and national, regional and local governments in several countries. His work focuses on the governance of local and regional development and spatial planning and the political, social and cultural foundations of regions.