While conducting my study, I had the privilege of being surrounded by a marvellous network of people. I therefore wish to thank a number of professors, colleagues, friends and family who supported me throughout this research project. My gratitude goes to Professor Kathryn McMahon who sparked my interest in digital platforms. This study would not exist without her encouraging support, and numerous, often highly detailed comments on the content of the book, as well as further versions of the monograph. I would also like to express my gratitude to Professor Petri Kuoppamäki for long discussions on my research and for support throughout the project, as well as to Professors Björn Lundvist from the Stockholm University and Christian Bergqvist from the University of Copenhagen for their irreplaceable and valuable comments. I wish to separately thank Professor Kimmo Nuotio and Professor Katri Havu for their advice and support and as well as other kind and generous professors, administrative staff and department colleagues from the University of Helsinki for their general support and encouragement.

I would also like to thank Doctor Jennifer Rowland for checking the language of the text and Kalle Markkanen from the Legal Tech Lab for his irreplaceable help with editing the book. Thank you also Ben Booth and Amber Watts from Edward Elgar for enabling me to publish this book.

This book also owes its shape to Professor Giorgio Monti from the European University Institute, Professor Hans Henrik Lidgard from Lund University, as well as Professor Caroline Heide-Jørgensen from the University of Copenhagen. Special thanks go to Professor Anna Piszcz and Doctor Katarzyna Granat for their encouragement and friendship during the writing process.

During the years that I have been a member of the research circle on competition law, I have had the pleasure of discussing my research as well as other competition issues with like-minded competition researchers, such as Katri, Juha, Patrick, Rainer, Toni and Rick. Thank you for your comments and support.

I have the pleasure of working with amazing people in a great start-up – the Legal Tech Lab at the University of Helsinki. I wish to thank its Director, Professor Riikka Koulu for her invaluable comments on the book proposal and draft of the book, as well as her continuous support throughout the project, support for my research ideas and encouragement to push the borders of research outside my comfort zone. I also wish to thank one of the staff members – Jenni Hakkarainen – for discussions on research-related topics.

I am also grateful to my dearest partners in crime, doctors Daria Kozłowska-Rautianen and Katja Karjalainen, as well as Maija Helmimen and Marta Maroni, who have also been encouraging me and cheering me on all this time. My biggest thanks go to my Polish and Finnish family. Without their patience and support, it would have been impossible to compete this project. A particular thanks go to my Dad, who never doubted me but who cannot, unfortunately, celebrate the end of it with me. Finally, my deepest gratitude to Tuomas and Jan, for their unconditional love and extreme patience.
