Acknowledgements

Much of this book was written on the lands of the Yugambeh people. To that end, I acknowledge and pay respects to the Yugambeh people of the Gold Coast and all their descendants past and present. I also acknowledge the many Australian Aboriginal people from other regions as well as Torres Strait and South Sea Islander people who now live in the area.

Thanks to all the staff at Edward Elgar who helped me publish this work. I am very grateful.

I could not have produced this manuscript without the significant expertise of Machiko Kanetake, Sanzhuang Guo, and Heetae Bae, with whom I co-wrote Chapters 3, 4, and 5 respectively. I acknowledge and thank each of you for being willing to work with me.

I am grateful to the Faculty of Law at Bond University for the research grant funds that enabled me to engage research assistant, Alana Bonenfant. To that end, I am equally grateful to Alana, for agreeing to this project into her study schedule, and also to Renee Shike, who assisted in researching parts of Chapter 4.

Sincere thanks are also owed to Steven Freeland and Dan Svantesson, who provided feedback on Chapter 2 of the draft manuscript. An additional layer of thanks is owed to Dan for his cheerful, kind, and helpful guidance as my colleague for almost a decade now. I am also grateful for the intellectual guidance and career support I have received from Anthony Cassimatis and Cedric Ryngaert over the years.

All websites cited were live as at 9 December 2020. Of course, any flaws in this book are entirely of my own making.

Thanks to Clair and William for evenings at the Prince and the good humour that keeps one afloat. Thanks also to Narelle for her ever-steady support as a colleague and friend. Thanks to Chris for everything.

As this book was completed in 2020, it would also be remiss of me not to thank health and other essential workers for keeping us all going in challenging times.
