About the authors

John Spriggs is an Adjunct Professor with the Centre for Sustainable Communities, University of Canberra. He combined interests in agricultural supply chains and collaborative development methods by undertaking, with Barbara Chambers, ACIAR projects in Papua New Guinea, Vietnam, Cambodia and Pakistan. Recently, he was a member of the evaluation team of the CGIAR research program on Policies, Markets and Institutions for the FAO and studied the extent to which researchers were attempting to link research with development using collaborative methods such as multi-stakeholder dialogue. (ORCID https://orcid.org/0000-0002-3358-5370)

Barbara Chambers is an Adjunct Professor with the Centre for Sustainable Communities at the University of Canberra, Australia. Working closely with marketing, horticultural, livestock, policy and economics researchers, she developed innovative collaborative participatory methodologies in community engagement, especially in relation to women and girls. She has won several Category 1 research grants with John Spriggs since 2001. Their most recent collaborative research grant was in Pakistan, completed in 2015 and funded by the Australian Centre for International Agricultural Research. (ORCID https://orcid.org/0000-0001-7133-3193)

Carole Kayrooz is an Emeritus Professor and an international higher education consultant with 25 years’ experience in leadership, strategic planning, complex systems thinking and organizational development in Australia and overseas. She was formerly Deputy Vice-Chancellor of the University of Canberra leading educational reform. She has conducted leadership, strategic management and development, health and education projects for UNESCO and AusAID. Her most recent international development experience was educational policy advice to the Royal Institute of Management in Bhutan from 2012 to 2015. (ORCID https://orcid.org/0000-0001-9260-9750)