Being aware of my lack of qualification for the task of writing a history of Basic Income, I have relied to a considerable extent on books written by Timothée Duverger, Peter Sloman, Karl Widerquist, Philippe Van Parijs, Walter Van Trier, and Yannick Vanderborgh; on chapters containing historical material in collections edited by Richard Caputo and Larry Liu; John Cunliffe and Guido Erreygers; Karl Widerquist, José Noguera, Yannick Vanderborgh and Jurgen De Wispelaere; and Robert van der Veen and Loek Groot; on a number of the chapters in The Palgrave International Handbook of Basic Income; and on a wide variety of other books, chapters and articles. Wherever possible, and particularly for the earlier period, I have consulted original sources, and I have been grateful for assistance with this from librarians at the British Library and at the British Library of Political and Economic Science at the London School of Economics. I am particularly grateful to a significant number of individuals who have assisted me with historical material and with useful advice, and particularly to Peter Sloman, Philippe Van Parijs, Walter Van Trier and Karl Widerquist, who have read and commented on all or most of a first draft; and to Gabriela Cabaña, Marc de Basquiat, Sarath Davala, Loek Groot, Louise Haagh, Claudia and Dirk Haarmann, Seán Healy, Barb Jacobson, Julio Linares, Rubén Lo Vuolo, Leire Rincón, Ulrich Schachtschneider, Enno Schmidt, Lena Stark, Hamid Tabatabai, Enkeleida Tahiraj and Gunmin Yi, who have provided useful comment on those parts of the history that they know most about. Statements made and opinions expressed are of course entirely the responsibility of the author and should not be taken to be statements by or to represent the views of any other individual or organization.

In relation to this and the other books that I have been able to write on Basic Income I am grateful to the Social Policy Department at the London School of Economics for granting me Visiting Senior Fellowships between 2011 and 2020, and to Professor Hartley Dean for supervising my work; to the publishers of my previous books on Basic Income—Policy Press, Palgrave Macmillan, Edward Elgar Publishing, and Darton, Longman and Todd—and, in relation to this history, Edward Elgar; to the trustees of the Citizen’s Basic Income Trust, which it was my privilege to serve as secretary and then honorary Director for a total of twenty years; to the Executive Committee and members of the Basic Income Earth Network (BIEN), of which I am currently honorary General Manager; to staff at the Institute for Social and Economic Research for assistance with microsimulation research; and to successive Bishops of Woolwich and the officers of the South London parishes that I have served in a stipendiary capacity from 1980 to 2014 for permission to spend some of my time researching and debating Basic Income.

A little while ago, I held a discussion with Guy Standing, author of numerous books on Basic Income and related subjects, on the current state of Basic Income literature. We came to the view that the literature was substantially saturated, and we could identify few gaps. My most recent publication on the subject, A Modern Guide to Citizen’s Basic Income: A Multidisciplinary Approach, published by Edward Elgar Publishing in 2020, filled one of those gaps, as there was until then no single author multidisciplinary study of Basic Income. Another gap was a comprehensive history. I hope that this history will fill that gap until a better one is written.

Any royalties due on this book will be donated to the Basic Income Earth Network (BIEN).
