

Acknowledgements

This book would not have been possible without the financial support of several generous organizations and the professional support of capable staff. Foremost, we wish to thank the Association of European Universities (CRE) for initiating the project. It represents an extension to the graduate student/professional level and a broadening to include American representation of their prior initiative to promote education in environmental economics. We are also grateful to the Dean's Office of the College of Earth and Mineral Sciences of The Pennsylvania State University and to the John S. Bugas Endowment of the University of Wyoming for financial support of the Conference at Airlie Center, Virginia, at which the papers in this volume were first presented and extensively discussed by the authors and editors.

The brunt of the organization of the conference was ably undertaken by Jan Moyer of The Pennsylvania State University. Jill Bernaski assisted in that effort and also produced the conference brochure. Additional funding support was provided to Shelby Gerking for his travel and editorial duties by the Center for Economic Research of Tilburg University, and by the Netherlands Organization for Scientific Research (NWO).
