Contributors

Derek H. Aldcroft is currently University Fellow in the School of History at the University of Leicester, formerly Research Professor in Economic History at Manchester Metropolitan University (1994–2001), Professor and Head of Department of Economic History at the Universities of Sydney (1973–76) and Leicester (1976–94). He is the author of many books and papers on British and European economic history including From Versailles to Wall Street: The International Economy, 1919–1929 (Allen Lane, 1977), The British Economy, Vol. I: The Years of Turmoil, 1920–1951 (Wheatsheaf, 1986) and Studies in the Interwar European Economy (Ashgate 1997). He has recently published a volume entitled Europe’s Third World (Ashgate, 2006) and is currently working on Sub-Saharan Africa’s growth failure since decolonization.

Michael Beenstock has been Professor of Economics at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem since 1989. He currently teaches macroeconomics, financial econometrics and time series econometrics. His current research interests include immigrant absorption, economics of the family, illicit drug consumption and macroeconometrics. In the past he took an interest in energy economics and has published a dozen papers in the area. His interest in OPEC began as a young economist at HM Treasury (London) where in 1971 he was a member of a working party on ‘Vast Surpluses of Oil Producing Countries’. In October 1973 he wrote a paper predicting that by the end of the century oil prices would return to their 1972 level. Following this, he represented the Treasury in Whitehall and abroad on OPEC-related issues. He is currently advising the Monetary Policy Department at the Bank of Israel.

Forrest H. Capie is Professor of Economic History at the Cass Business School, City University, London. After a doctorate at the London School of Economics in the 1970s and a teaching fellowship there, he taught at the University of Warwick and the University of Leeds. He has been a British Academy Overseas Fellow at the National Bureau, New York, a Visiting Professor at the University of Aix-Marseille and at the London School of Economics, and a Visiting Scholar at the IMF. He has written widely on money, banking and trade and commercial policy. He was Head of Department of Banking and Finance at City University from 1989 to 1992 and Editor of the Economic History Review from 1993 to 1999. He is currently a member of the Academic Advisory Council of the Institute of Economic Affairs. He is an Academician of the Academy of Social Sciences. He is currently on secondment at the Bank of England writing the next instalment in its history.

W.R. Garside, formerly of the University of Birmingham, UK, is currently Professor of Economic History and Dean, University of Otago, New Zealand. He has written extensively on government economic policy in twentieth-century Britain with particular reference to industrial decline, unemployment and the political economy of structural change. Other published work embraces British fiscal policy in the 1930s, employers’ industrial relations strategies, the British coal industry, the sources and validity of unemployment statistics since the mid-nineteenth century, European interwar economic policy and industrial rationalization in Britain between the wars. He is currently engaged on a revisionist study of the Japanese developmental state since 1945, building upon research first undertaken as Visiting Professor at the Institute of Economic Research, Hitotsubashi University, Tokyo. In addition, he collaborates with colleagues in Japan investigating the sources of Japanese growth and decline from the nineteenth century to present times and with others investigating business enterprise in twentieth-century New Zealand.

Steven Morewood is a lecturer in international history in the Institute of Archaeology & Antiquity, School of Historical Studies, University of

Michael J. Oliver is Professor of Economics at École Supérieure de Commerce de Rennes and a director of Lombard Street Associates, UK. He graduated in economic history at the University of Leicester and was awarded his PhD in economics and economic history from Manchester Metropolitan University. He has held posts at the universities of the West of England, Leeds, Sunderland and Bates College, USA and has been a Visiting Professor at Gettysburg College, Pennsylvania and Colby College, Maine. He is the author of several books including Whatever Happened To Monetarism? Economic Policymaking and Social Learning in the United Kingdom Since 1979 (Ashgate, 1997); Exchange Rate Regimes in the Twentieth Century (with Derek Aldcroft, 1st edn, Edward Elgar, 1998) and The Liquidity Theory of Asset Prices (with Gordon Pepper, Wiley, 2006). He has contributed articles to Economic History Review, Twentieth Century British History, Economic Affairs, Contemporary British History, Economic Review and Essays in Economic and Business History. He is currently working on a reappraisal of the international monetary system between 1964 and 1972 and investigating the evolution of UK monetary policy since 1971.

John Singleton is Reader in Economic History at Victoria University of Wellington, NZ. He completed his PhD in economics at Lancaster University in England. After working at the London School of Economics and the Universities of Lancaster, York and Manchester, he moved to Geoffrey E. Wood is Professor of Economics at Cass Business School, UK and Professor of Monetary Economics at the University of Buckingham. He went to the University of Warwick in 1968 as Lecturer in Economics and then spent two years as Visiting Economist with the Bank of England, where he was until recently a special advisor on financial stability. In 1975, he joined City University and since 1976 he has been Professor of Economics. He was Visiting Scholar at the Federal Reserve Bank of St Louis from 1977–78, has advised the New Zealand Treasury on a wide range of issues and has also been Visiting Scholar at the Federal Reserve Bank of New York and the Bank of Finland. Geoffrey Wood is also a Visiting Professorial Fellow in the Centre for Commercial Law Studies at Queen Mary and Westfield College, University of London and a Visiting Professor at the University of Athens.