Contributors

David F. Gates is a consultant on Asia and world economic and energy issues for the Petroleum Finance Company, an international energy consultancy in Washington, DC. Dr. Gates holds a Ph.D. in economics from Princeton University and was employed by Exxon Corporation for more than 32 years, including more than nine years resident in Japan.

D. Gale Johnson is the Eliakim Hastings Moore Distinguished Service Professor Emeritus of Economics at the University of Chicago. His area of specialization is agricultural economics and he has studied the development of China’s agriculture and rural economy during the reform period of the last two decades.

Doowon Lee is Associate Professor of Economics in Yonsei University, Seoul, Korea. He received his Ph.D. in economics from Northwestern University in 1991, specializing in international trade and economic development.

Haizheng Li is Assistant Professor of Economics at Georgia Institute of Technology. He researches a variety of topics in econometric methods and labor economics, including migration choices, labor supply, returns to schooling and the incidence of social security tax.

Liu Liu is a research assistant in economics at Hopkins-Nanjing Center, Nanjing, China. Her current research interest is foreign direct investment in China.

Minquan Liu is the Providence Professor in Economics at Hopkins-Nanjing Center, Nanjing, China. His current research interests include foreign direct investment and Rural Credit Cooperatives in China.

Ding Lu, Associate Professor of Economics in National University of Singapore, holds a Ph.D. from Northwestern University. He has published three books and 16 papers in peer-reviewed international journals on the Chinese economy, telecommunications, trade and investment, and other issues.

Chen-yuan Tung is a Ph.D. candidate in international affairs at the School of Advanced International Studies, Johns Hopkins University. His expertise focuses on economic relations between Taiwan and China, Chinese economic development, and Taiwan–US–China trilateral relations.

Zhi Wang is a Senior Research Scientist at George Mason University. His major fields of study include computable general equilibrium modeling, economic integration among Pacific Rim countries, behavior of economic agents under quantity constraint, and international trade.

Guanzhong James Wen received his Ph.D. degree in Economics from University of Chicago and currently is Associate Professor at Trinity College, Connecticut, USA. He served as president of the Chinese Economists Society in 1999–2000.

Luodan Xu is Professor of Economics in Lingnan College, Zhongshan University, Guangzhou, China. One of her current research interests is foreign direct investment in China.

Guifang Yang is an economist and manager at Arthur Andersen LLP. Her research interests include the theoretical and empirical linkages among intellectual property rights, international technology transfer and economic growth, and computable general equilibrium modeling of international trade issues.

Jason Z. Yin is Associate Professor of Strategy Management and International Business at W. Paul Stillman School of Business, Seton Hall University. His research interests are in areas of strategic management, international trade and investment, business environment in China and Internet strategy.

Kevin Honglin Zhang is Assistant Professor of Economics at Illinois State University. He has published over 20 articles in leading academic journals, in addition to a book and many book-chapters.

Xiaobo Zhang is a postdoctoral fellow at the International Food Policy Research Institute. His research interest focuses on income distribution and public investment, with particular reference to China and India.

Huizhong Zhou is Professor of Economics at Western Michigan University, a visiting professor at Beijing University and Fudan University in China and a visiting research fellow at Rikkyo University in Japan. His current research interest focuses on competition in regulated industries, including telecommunications and tobacco industries.