

Tables

1.1	Surveyed local productive arrangements in Brazil – 2000	25
3.1	Holdings of corporate equities by type of institution	95
3.2	The first 15 US pension funds by foreign assets	104
4.1	Condensed summary of the Kondratiev waves	131
5.1	Proportion of firms responding ‘high extent’ to the following question: ‘To what degree have the following conditions contributed to changes in work content of the employees during the period 1993–95?’	169
5.2	Proportion of firms that introduced changes in products, organization and relationships with suppliers and users (%) among firms that experienced much stronger, somewhat stronger or unchanged competition, 1993–95	170
5.3	Proportion of firms responding ‘yes’ to the following question: ‘Has the firm extended its use of the following organizational traits during the period 1993–95?’	171
5.4	Proportion of firms responding ‘more’ to the following question: ‘Has the content of work changed for employees during the period 1993–95 with more emphasis on . . .’	174
5.5	Proportion of firms responding ‘larger’ to the following question: ‘Has the firm changed its demands when recruiting employees during the period 1993–95 regarding . . .’	175
7.1	Brazil: geographical area distribution, total and per capita GDP, population, illiteracy rate, and scientific papers by large regions and states	214
8.1	The various catch-up strategies in principle available to a country starting from behind or having fallen behind in the process of economic development	248
9.1	Types of clusters and their performance	254
11.1	Comparison between central and peripheral economies	295
11.2	Entrepreneurial behaviour: centre and periphery	295
11.3	Entrepreneurial international co-operation	298
11.4	Central and peripheral universities	302
11.5	S&T policies in the USA, the EU, Japan and Latin America	303
11.6	National systems of innovation in the North and in the South	303

12.1	Macroeconomic systems and conditions for competition	313
12.2	Sectors under foreign investors' control	321
12.3	Sectors under Brazilian investors' control	322
12.4	Balance of payments (in US$ billion)	323
13.1	Profile of analysed firms	335
13.2	Types of co-operation among actors	342
13.3	Estimated evolution of the number of firms in the Campina Grande productive arrangement – 1998/2000	345
14.1	South-Brazilian footwear industry structure	356
14.2	Profile of footwear firms analysed	356
14.3	Profile of the leather footwear productive system in Sinos Valley	358
14.4	Representative organizations placed in Sinos Valley	363
14.5	Interactive learning strategies in the leather-footwear productive system	367
15.1	Firms according to their segment, number of employees and cities/textile and clothing industry of Itajaí Valley, Santa Catarina – 2000	379
15.2	Level of integration of the firms of the textile and clothing industry of Itajaí Valley, Santa Catarina – 2000	381
15.3	Advantages to the firm in relation to location/textile and clothing industry of Itajaí Valley, Santa Catarina – 2000	387
15.4	Main sources of information for the development of new technologies considered as 'important' and 'very important'/textile and clothing industry of Itajaí Valley, Santa Catarina – 2000	389
15.5	Main ways of developing and incorporating new technologies considered as 'important' and 'very important'/textile and clothing industry of Itajaí Valley, Santa Catarina – 2000	390
15.6	Current expenditure on R&D, its evolution and future protections/textile and clothing industry of Itajaí Valley, Santa Catarina – 2000	390
15.7	Evolution of the relations of cooperation of the large and medium firms with their suppliers of inputs and equipment at local level in the last five years/textile and clothing industry of Itajaí Valley, Santa Catarina – 2000	393
15.8	Sales, number of workers, installed capacity, and market/textile and clothing industry of Itajaí Valley, Santa Catarina 1990–99	397
15.9	Firms' investment objectives for the next five years/textile and clothing industry of Itajaí Valley, Santa Catarina – 2000	399

15.10	Firms' reaction to the flow of foreign direct investments/ textile and clothing industry of Itajaí Valley, Santa Catarina – 2000	400
16.1	Growth rates in the world production of ornamental stones between 1976 and 1995	405
16.2	Cooperation relationships of companies with other actors in the production arrangements	417
16.3	Profile of the required manual labour qualifications, according to local businessmen	419
18.1	Degree of vertical integration	451
18.2	Main advantages associated with the localization of the firm in the region	452
18.3	Main sources of information used to promote innovations	454
18.4	Localization of the firm with which some cooperation has been established in the last 5 years and the intensity of these relationships	459
18.5	Investment objectives	462
18.6	Mechanisms of development or incorporation of new technologies	464
19.1	Gross revenue and external trade indicators for the telecommunications equipment industry (software and hardware)	475
19.2	Trade balance of the telecommunications sector and electronic complex deficit (1996–2001)	479
19.3	Main characteristics of the relationships between firms in the arrangement	481
19.4	Main characteristics of the relationships between firms and research institutions and universities	482
19.5	Main sources of technology for equipment manufactured by the firms (1998)	483
19.6	Main sources of information for the development of new technologies considered important or very important	485
19.7	Main ways of developing new technologies considered either important or very important	486
19.8	Annual expenditure on R&D over gross sales	488
19.9	Use of fiscal incentives by firms (1998)	489
19.10	Institutions with which firms develop a project (1998)	490
19.11	Reasons to interact/cooperate with other institutions (1998)	491
20.1	Partners of the ERJ-170/190 programme intending to invest or to settle in Brazil	517
22.1	Criteria for identifying industrial agglomerations	551
22.2	Basic features of identified agglomerations	553

22.3	Employment distribution per size of establishment (in %)	554
22.4	Criteria of overlapping and identification of LPSs	556
22.5	Structural features of LPSs	557
23.1	Local productive arrangements in Brazil by type of governance, degree of territorialization and market destination	572