

Figures

1.1	Akamatsu's wild-geese-flying patterns	10
1.2	Mutating aggregate production functions, FG-style	13
1.3	Structural upgrading under Pax Britannica-led and Pax Americana-led growth-clustering	15
1.4	The political trilemma of the world economy	20
1.5	Sequential catch-up development: Japan vs. Russia	27
2.1	Labor-driven economic development, wage magnification, and outward FDI (the 'price-knowledge/industry-flow' mechanism à la Hume at work)	46
3.1	Konbinato clusters	54
3.2	Paradox of resource-driven industrialization in resource-poor Japan – and its outcome	64
4.1	Passenger car production by major countries	71
4.2	Conventional mass production (a 'push' system) vs. Toyota's lean production (a 'pull' system)	75
4.3	A multiple division of labor in the vertically integrated stages of production	78
4.4	The paradox of 'multiple entrants in a small market', reserved competition, and outward FDI	82
5.1	Changes in R&D stock and changes in total factor productivity (TFP), 1970–1994	103
A5.1	The pattern of the investment development path	109
A5.2	Flying-geese paradigm and the meso-IDP	111
A5.3	Structural upgrading and meso-IDPs	115
A5.4	Japan's balance of technology trade as a technology development path (TDP)	117
A5.5	Japan's technology trade with other major countries	118
A5.6	Japan's balance of technology trade by manufacturing industry	119
6.1	International comparison of rate of introduction of IT-related applications	128
6.2	International comparison of e-commerce use and main networks used	129
6.3	International comparison of foreign outsourcing of business as a result of IT introduction	130

7.1	Industrial upgrading and growth clustering, flying-geese style, in East Asia (comparative-advantage-recycling cluster)	141
7.2	Japan's stages of industrial upgrading and outward FDI	143
7.3	Stages of development, changing factor proportions, and dynamic comparative advantage	150
7.4	Triumvirate pro-trade structural transformation	153
8.1	Trichotomy of economic coordination	168
8.2	Japan as a network society and its manifestations in business organization	172
8.3	Japan's catch-up in structural upgrading under different forms of business organization	180
9.1	Distorted structural dualism	191
9.2	'Internal and external differentials' and outward FDI	193
9.3	Corporate tax reform and business restructuring	203