Contributors

J. Alberto Aragón-Correa obtained his PhD degree from University of Seville and he is the head of the Department of Management and an assistant professor at the School of Economics and Business, University of Granada, Spain, and visiting professor at the Rotterdam School of Management, Erasmus University, The Netherlands. He teaches strategic management and environmental management. His research interests include strategic behaviour of firms, organizations and natural environment, and small firms. His research has been published in the most prestigious Spanish journals and English language journals such as the Academy of Management Journal, the Academy of Management Review, Sustainable Development and the Journal of Business Research.

Frank Boons is an associate professor at the Erasmus Centre for Sustainability and Environmental Management, Rotterdam University, The Netherlands, As an organizational and economic sociologist, his interest is in the dynamics of inter-organizational processes that relate to sustainable development. Currently, his work focuses on the ways in which individuals that represent firms, governmental agencies, and NGO’s, enact the concept of sustainability. He has published in journals such as Business Strategy and the Environment, Journal of Industrial Ecology and Environmental Politics, a special issue on organizations and the environment of the International Journal of Management and Organization. He has co-authored a book The Changing Nature of Business (2000).

Per Christensen is a professor in environmental planning at the Department of Development and Planning at Aalborg University, Denmark. He has for many years studied the implementation of environmental regulations in a broader context, encompassing among others the inspiration from institutional theories. This has mainly concerned the implementation of new forms of regulation related to the topic of cleaner production, as well as experiences on implementing environmental management systems in industries. Lately these interests are moving more in the direction of how to develop EMS into LCM or life cycle management.

Enrique Claver-Cortés is a professor in business management at the University of Alicante, Spain. He earned his PhD degree from the University of Valencia, Spain. His current research includes strategic management, human resource management, quality management and environmental management.

Rafel Crespi-Cladera is a professor of business economics at the Universitat de les Illes Balears (UIB), Spain and Family Business Banca March Chair. He obtained his PhD from the Universitat Autonoma of Barcelona (UAB). His research is mainly on empirical corporate governance, focused on Spanish and European Corporations. He has been visiting researcher at Tilburg University, The Netherlands and Oxford University. Currently he is the coordinator of a doctorate in economics management and organization jointly offered by the UAB, UIB and the Universidad Publica de Navarra.

Jesús Ángel del Brío is doctor cum laude of business administration at Universidad de Oviedo. He has taught firm organization at Universidad de Oviedo since 1995 and he has been the assistant master in human resource management in the Universidad Carlos III. His research work has been directed toward the study of environmental management from several points of view. In these topics, he has published in books and journals including Ecological Economics, Eco-Management and Auditing, Environmental Practice, Environmental Quality Management, International Journal of Production Research, International Journal of Quality and Reliability Management, Resources, Conservation and Recycling, Technovation and Total Quality Management. He has published a book entitled Medio ambiente y empresa: de la confrontación a la oportunidad with Beatriz Junquera.

Esteban Fernández has successively been appointed bachelor and doctor of business administration at Universidad de Oviedo, Spain. He is professor of firm organization at Universidad de Valladolid and at Universidad de Oviedo. His research work has been directed towards the study of technology, production management, strategy and environmental management. His studies on environmental management have been published in several national and international journals, such as Ecological Economics, International Journal of Human Resource Management, International Journal of Quality and Reliability Management and Total Quality Management.

Beatriz Junquera is doctor cum laude of business administration at the Universidad de Oviedo, Spain. She has taught firm organization at the Universidad de Oviedo since 1991. She has studied strategic technology management, innovation management, environmental management, environmental strategy’s effects on firm’s performance, and female

George I. Kassinis is an assistant professor of management in the Department of Public and Business Administration of the University of Cyprus. He received his PhD in public policy from Princeton University. His research interests include strategy, environmental management and stakeholder management. His work has been published in Strategic Management Journal, Production and Operations Management, Journal of Environmental Planning and Management, and Environmental Impact Assessment Review. He is a member of the editorial review board of Progress in Industrial Ecology and a member of the Academy of Management, the Strategic Management Society and the International Association for Business and Society.

Manfred Kirchgeorg is a professor at HHL-Leipzig Graduate School of Management, Germany, where he holds the chair for marketing management. His research revolves around environmental management, sustainability marketing, stakeholder marketing and corporate brand management. Manfred is involved in a number of scholarly organizations, including the Federation of University Professors in Business Administration. He was chairman of the Environmental Management Commission of the Federation in 2003 and 2004. He has been a visiting professor at various universities in the United States, Canada, Brazil, Switzerland and Singapore. He is involved in national and international consulting and research projects, and has published several books and a large number of articles in learned journals and collaborative volumes.

Jesper Møller Larsen is employed in the technical department of Aabybro Kommune, a middle-sized municipality in Northern Jutland. He graduated in 2002 with an MSc in environmental management), writing a thesis concerning green networking and self-regulation among municipalities and companies in Denmark. At present he is, amongst others, responsible for physical planning, waste management, Agenda 21, and corporate affairs (pollution prevention) in the municipality.
Martin Lehmann is a PhD student in environmental management at the Department of Business Studies at Aalborg University, Denmark. His research interests include environmental management and institutional and organizational change, especially as it relates to ecological modernization and networks. His dissertation investigates how networks and public–private partnerships contribute to the dissemination of knowledge, capacity development and conceptual developments of environmental management practices and sustainability. He is focusing his research on both developing and developed countries; especially Thailand, where he has first-hand working experience, and Denmark.

María D. López-Gamero is an assistant lecturer in business management at the University of Alicante, Spain. She is a PhD candidate at the University of Alicante. Her current research focuses on environmental management.

Henning Madsen is an associate professor at Department of Information Science, the Aarhus School of Business. He has an MSc in mathematical economics from the University of Aarhus and a PhD in business economics from the Aarhus School of Business. His research results have been published in international journals and presented at international conferences and research meetings. He is currently involved in research projects focusing on environmental management, social networks and entrepreneurship, and trends in managerial and organizational development. He has received the ANBAR Citation of Excellence Reward.

Fernando Matías-Reche is an assistant professor at the School of Economics and Business, University of Granada, Spain. He teaches human resource management and organizational behaviour. His research interests include outsourcing, organizations and natural environment, and small firms. His research has been published in some of the most prestigious Spanish journals and English language journals such as the Journal of Business Research.

José F. Molina-Azorín is a senior lecturer in business management at the University of Alicante, Spain. He earned his PhD degree from the University of Alicante. His research focuses on relationships between strategy, quality management and environmental management.

Francina Orfila-Sintes is a professor of business economics at the Universitat de les Illes Balears (UIB), Spain. She has a PhD from the UIB. Her research is mainly on innovation, services and environmental management. She has been visiting researcher at Roskilde University, Denmark.

Catherine A. Ramus is an assistant professor at the Donald Bren School of Environmental Science and Management, University of California, Santa Barbara. She teaches organizational behaviour and team dynamics, negotiation and environmental management. Her research interests in the field of corporate environmental management include how organizations can support employee-led environmental problem-solving and value creation, and how organizations can attract and retain employees through commitment to socially and environmentally sustainable practices. Her research has been published in journals such as the Academy of Management Journal, California Management Review, the Journal of Management Education, and the Journal of World Business. She has held positions at the United States Environmental Protection Agency and IMD International, where she conducted research with companies that were interested in improving their environmental management practices. She has a doctorate from HEC at the University of Lausanne, a master’s degree from Harvard’s Kennedy School of Government in Public Administration, and an undergraduate degree in economics and political science from the University of California at Berkeley.

Nigel Roome is chair of Sustainable Enterprise and Transformation at Erasmus University Rotterdam. He publishes on topics that relate to business and technology to environmental management, sustainable development, corporate social responsibility and global change, including books such as Sustainability Strategies for Industry, Island Press (1998) and The Ecology of Information and Communications Technologies, Greenleaf
Sanjay Sharma is a professor of strategic management and sustainability at Wilfrid Laurier University. His doctoral dissertation from the University of Calgary won the Best Dissertation Award from the Social Issues in Management Division of the Academy of Management in 1996. He has received several research awards including the Jossey Bass/New Lexington Press Award for the Best Academy of Management Paper on Organizations and the Natural Environment (1997), Best Strategy Paper at the Administrative Sciences Association of Canada (2003) and the ANBAR Citation of Excellence (1999). He was awarded a Fulbright Fellowship in 2001–2002 and has received several research grants from the Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada (SSHRC). He has served on the Council’s Research Funding Adjudication Committee and his biography has been listed in Who’s Who in Canadian Business for the last few years. His research has been published in the Academy of Management Review, Academy of Management Journal, Academy of Management Executive, Strategic Management Journal, Journal of Applied Behavioral Science, Business Strategy and the Environment, Journal of Asian Business, Journal of Strategic Marketing and Revue Francaise de Gestion, among others. His books include Research on Corporate Sustainability: The Evolving Theory and Practice of Organizations in the Natural Environment and New Perspectives in Research on Corporate Sustainability: Stakeholders, the Environment, and Society (both co-edited with Mark Starik) published in 2003 by Edward Elgar. Before pursuing an academic career, he worked for 16 years as a senior manager with multinational corporations. Sanjay is the past chair of the ONE Interest Group at the Academy of Management.

Andreas C. Soteriou is an associate professor of operations management in the Department of Public and Business Administration of the University of Cyprus. He holds a PhD degree in business administration from the University of Southern California. His primary research interests focus in the areas of operations management, quality and productivity improvement in the service sector. His work has been published in journals such as Juan J. Tarí-Guilló is a senior lecturer in business management at the University of Alicante, Spain. He earned his PhD degree from the University of Alicante. His current field of research is total quality management.

John P. Ulhøi is professor of organization and management theory and director of an inter-institutional doctoral school in Org and Mngt in Denmark. His most recent publications appear in journals such as Journal of Business Venturing, Journal of Organizational Behavior and Management Decision. He has served as an editorial board member for a variety of journals. He has served as a board member of several internal organizations, including the TIM division of the Academy of Management. Professor Ulhøi has acted as international research evaluator for the EU Commission, the Office for Scientific Affairs in Belgium, the Norwegian Research Council, the Danish Social Science Research Council and the European Foundation for Management Development in Brussels among others.

Monika I. Winn is an associate professor of strategy, corporate environmental management and sustainability at the University of Victoria's Faculty of Business in British Columbia, Canada. Her research revolves around corporate sustainability management, organizational and institutional change, and sustainable entrepreneurship, and often has international scope. She has published research articles both on strategic and on institutional change, corporate greening, organizational learning, corporate environmental leadership, and stakeholder research methodology. She is actively involved in a number of scholarly organizations, and is a founding member and past chair of the Academy of Management’s ONE Group (Organizations and the Natural Environment). She is engaged in consulting and executive education on sustainability leadership.