
The editors

Lester Lloyd-Reason is Professor of International Enterprise Strategy and Director of the Centre for International Business Research and Development at the Ashcroft International Business School, Anglia Ruskin University in Cambridge. He is a visiting professor at the University of Paris XIII and serves on the editorial board of a number of journals, including the International Small Business Journal (ISBJ). He is a trustee and member of the Board of Directors of the Institute for Small Business and Entrepreneurship. He has been researching and consulting in the area of entrepreneurial management of international SMEs for many years and has considerable experience of managing international research projects in the field of small business support structures, both in central and eastern Europe and in the UK. He has received personal research grants from the British Academy and the Soros Foundation and has acted as strategic adviser to a number of organisations both within the private and public sectors. His current research interests revolve around skills and knowledge development in international small and medium-size enterprises, in particular the transfer of skills and knowledge between SMEs and higher education institutions. Heavily involved in the arts, he serves on the Board of Directors of Menagerie Theatre Company, a production company for new writing based in Cambridge.

Leigh Sear is Director of Research at Wood Holmes Group, a research and consultancy business based in the North East of England. He is a vice-president, trustee and member of the Board of Directors of the Institute of Small Business and Entrepreneurship and an Executive Committee member of the Entrepreneurship, Innovation and Small Business Network of the European Foundation for Management Development. He is also Chair of the Research Advisory Group for the Small Firms Enterprise Development Initiative (SFEDI) in the United Kingdom. Leigh has extensive experience of researching, understanding and supporting small business and enterprise development, and over the last ten years has worked with a range of public and private sector clients at a local, regional, national and international level. His current research interests include: small business support and governance structures, youth enterprise and entrepreneurship, internationalisation of small business and entrepreneurial networks and networking.