Acknowledgements

We wish to acknowledge the generous support received from the United States National Science Foundation in organizing the international conference on ICT and Development in Bangalore, India, which laid the foundation for this book. Most of the chapters in this book are enhanced, revised, or adapted versions of the papers presented at the conference. We also wish to acknowledge George Mason University’s School of Public Policy Dean Kingsley Haynes and Professor Don Kash, who provided invaluable intellectual support from the very beginning of this project. Professor K.B. Akhilesh of the Management Department at the Indian Institute of Science, Bangalore, our Indian partner for the conference, provided significant support including excellent conference facilities.

We are indebted to several talented individuals in the endeavor of putting the book together. M. G. Gopakumar of the Tata Management Training Center, Pune, India; Mucket Joshi, Independent Consultant, Gordon Shockley, Daisy Botros, and Donna Sherrard of the School of Public Policy helped in various aspects of editing and preparing the manuscripts.

We thank Alan Sturmer, Senior Acquisitions Editor of Edward Elgar Publishing for enthusiastically commissioning our book, Tara Gorvine for early support, Katy Wight, Promotions Manager for her publicity efforts, Caroline McLin, Managing Editor and Bob Pickens, Desk Editor for their excellent production support all through the project. Without their active assistance and commitment, this project would not have been possible.

Last, but not the least, we are indebted to our families – Tessy and daughter Sruthi, Barbara and children Jon and Brandon for their love and constant support.

Tojo Thatchenkery and Roger R. Stough