Acknowledgements

This book is based on my PhD thesis, ‘An Assessment of the Role of Voluntary Approaches in Public Environmental Policy’, carried out at Queen Mary, University of London. I am extremely grateful to Queen Mary for providing the scholarship that allowed me to carry out this research. I owe a particular debt to my supervisors, Professor Peter Muchlinski and Dr Amanda Perry-Kessaris, and to the Head of Postgraduate Studies, Professor Loukas Mistelis, for their help and support. In many ways, this book is theirs as much as it is mine (subject, of course, to the usual qualification that all errors and omissions are entirely the responsibility of the author).

The theory is that a PhD is a solo piece of work. Nothing could be further from the truth. This book builds on the ideas and information of more than 150 people who participated in face-to-face interviews. It also relies on the experience that I gained through working with friends and colleagues at Amnesty International, Mineral Policy Institute, Pacific Air & Environment, the World Bank’s Business Partners for Development Programme and Insight Investment.

Perhaps the hardest part of writing an acknowledgement is the realization that by specifically thanking individuals, one risks offending those who have not been included. Consequently, the following should be taken as an indicative list only. First of all, my poor flatmates, Janet Kahl and Kate Bowler, in Sydney endured 18 months of piles of paper, interminable phone calls and a perpetually distracted flatmate. I hope that you enjoyed reclaiming the living room! Second, Peter Frankental has been unfailingly supportive and generous since my return to the UK in London 2001. Third, my family (my parents, John and Carmel, and my siblings, Jean, John, Irene, Maeve, Olive and Mary) provided constant encouragement and help. Fourth, Robin Ormerod and Kristin Zeise of Pacific Air & Environment have been good friends ever since I first crossed their paths as a rather lost traveller in 1994. Your support has made both my PhD and this book possible. Thank you for everything.

Finally, this book is dedicated to Melinda Sweeting, who became my wife on 19 September 2004.
