Acknowledgements

The list of people who played a role in getting this book, based on my PhD dissertation, completed goes back some 16 years. In 1988, as I was graduating from INSEAD (European Institute of Business Administration), Sumantra Ghoshal approached me to stay on to do a PhD after my MBA. I seriously considered the option, but decided I wanted most to get out into the real world and experience how organizations really worked. Eleven years later the seed he had sown was finally germinating and I contacted him at the London Business School. We had a very pleasant and informative meeting about the options. I am very sad that his untimely death in March 2004 meant that he could not be with us to celebrate the completion of my PhD. I am extremely grateful to Bart Nooteboom for taking the risk and accepting me as an external PhD candidate, since at that time my health was still very frail and I thought more like a management consultant than an academic researcher. He suggested Arndt Sorge as the other supervisor and together they made a great and highly complementary team.

Wessel Ganzevoort deserves special thanks for unhesitatingly allowing me to join the KPMG Inspire Foundation in 1998. At the time I was trying to get back into the work process after spending two years recuperating from a serious accident, and without his help I would probably not have been able to do so. He also read the manuscript in the final phase and has supported me throughout.

Rafael Wittek has the dubious honour of inspiring me to add ‘trouble’ to my dissertation title. He also inspired me to apply relational signalling theory as the foundation for a theory of interpersonal trust building and use the trust and trouble event analysis. Over the past four years he has been an important source of inspiration and support.

The empirical work would not have been possible without the essentially unlimited access I was given to the two case study organizations, Krauthammer International and Deerns Raadgevend Ingenieurs. Ronald Meijers and his colleagues at Krauthammer and Jan Karel Mak and his colleagues at Deerns all took time from their busy lives to talk to me, let me observe them and complete my questionnaires. Ronald, Jan Karel and Eric Hooftman also took the trouble to read the manuscript in the final phase and make helpful comments.

I would also like to thank Deanne den Hartog, Christel Lane and Niels...
Acknowledgements

Noorderhaven for their time and effort in judging my PhD dissertation.

My current colleagues at the VU research programme on the integrity of governance deserve thanks as they have helped me through the final phases of this book and are providing me with the opportunity to continue researching issues in which I strongly believe.

Finally, my family has been the most important source of inspiration throughout my life and I thank them for that.

Zeist