Simone Abram is an anthropologist whose recent research has been on concepts, practices and relations of the local state in Britain and Norway. Publications include Rationalities of Planning (with Jonathan Murdoch, 2002), Anthropological Perspectives on Local Development (edited with Jacqueline Waldren, 1998) and the edited collection Science/Technology as Politics by Other Means, published by Focaal (2005).

Bodil Birkebæk Olesen recently received her PhD in anthropology from Aarhus University in Denmark. Her PhD thesis, based on ethnographic fieldwork in Mali, France, and the USA, is entitled ‘Crafting selves, circulating images: engagement, transformation, and relationality in Malian Bògòlan cloth’. Having taught and conducted research at universities in the USA, Denmark, and the UK, she is now based at the Department of Anthropology at University College London. Her primary research interests are in art and material culture, museums, globalization, and economic anthropology.

Magnus Boström is Associate Professor in sociology and is Senior Lecturer at Södertörn University College. Currently he is studying green political consumerism and rule-setting activities within the environmental field, including, for instance, eco-labelling of agricultural products, fisheries, forestry, and public procurement. He has published a number of articles and book chapters, and has edited a couple of books on related subjects. Among his recent publications is the book Eco-standards, Product Labelling and Green Consumerism, with Mikael Klintman (Palgrave, 2008).

Raoul Galli is a PhD candidate at the Department of Social Anthropology at Stockholm University. His main research interests are in the relations between culture, power, and social inequality. He has published ‘Rapport från varumärkenas produktionsfält’ ['Report from the field of brand production’], Kulturella Perspektiv, December 2005 (4).

Christina Garsten is Professor and Chair at the Department of Social Anthropology (Stockholm University) and Research Director at Score (Stockholm University and Stockholm School of Economics). Her research interests are in the anthropology of organizations and markets, with current focus on emerging forms of regulation and accountability in the labour market and in transnational trade. What interests her especially are the varieties of cultural articulation at the interface of market and community, and organization and sociality. She has published on organizational culture, flexibilization of employment, and corporate social responsibility. Among her recent publications are Organizing Transnational Accountability, co-edited with Magnus Boström (Edward Elgar, 2008).

Emiliano Grossman is Senior Research Fellow at the Centre de Recherches Politiques de Sciences Po (CEVIPOF) and a lecturer in comparative politics and political economy of European integration at the Institut d’Études Politiques de Paris. He holds a PhD from Science Po Paris and an MPhil from the University of Cambridge. His current research focuses on interest groups, the political economy of financial integration, and the strategic analysis of political institutions.

Anna Hasselström received her PhD in social anthropology at Stockholm University and has studied economic history and psychology. She is currently a researcher in the programmes ‘Fashioning markets: accountability and transparency in the global marketplace’ and ‘Social affairs: governance for a normative economy’ at the Department of Social Anthropology, Stockholm University and Score, Stockholm University and Stockholm School of Economics.

Mikael Klintman is Associate Professor and Senior Lecturer at the Research Policy Institute, Lund University in Sweden, and he received his PhD in sociology in 2000. He focuses on the ideas and practices aimed at increasing citizen/consumer/user participation in directions defined as environmentally and ethically sound by governments, non-governmental organizations (NGOs), and companies. Between 2000 and 2002, he did his Wallenberg postdoctorate at the Department of Political Science at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) in Cambridge, Massachusetts, where he did cross-Atlantic comparisons in this research field. Mikael Klintman is currently conducting research on standardization, labelling and certification of ecological and ethical production and services at an international scale, within the sectors of organic and genetically modified (GM) food, electricity, mutual funds, cotton, tourism, medicines, and green chemistry.

Monica Lindh de Montoya is Associate Professor in Social Anthropology at Stockholm University. Her interests include markets, entrepreneurship, and microfinance. She has carried out fieldwork in Sweden, Venezuela and in Bosnia-Herzegovina, contributed chapters to a number of books, and has also worked as a consultant in the field of international development for the United States Agency for International Development (USAID), the Consultative Group to Assist the Poor (CGAP), and the Swedish International Development Authority (SIDA). Recent publications include Market Matters: Exploring Cultural Processes in the Global Marketplace (co-edited with Christina Garsten, Palgrave Macmillan, 2004).

Emilio Luque teaches sociology at the Distance Education University in Madrid. He received his PhD from Universidad Complutense de Madrid by being critical in his dissertation about the notion of social capital, which he found depoliticizing. His main current research deals with citizenship, its connection to the environment, and rural policy. He has published also on labour market policy, the knowledge economy and the sociology of architecture.

Miguel Montoya is a researcher at the Department of Social Anthropology at Stockholm University, where he received his PhD. Previous research focused on forced migration due to the construction of a hyroelectric scheme in the Venezuelan Andes, and on colonization processes in the occupation of a forest reserve. Other interests include the anthropology of emerging markets, development, frontiers and political processes. His current research concerns democracy, civil society, and social movements in Venezuela.

Fabian Muniesa is a researcher at the Centre de Sociologie de l’Innovation and teaches economic sociology at the Ecole des Mines de Paris. He graduated in sociology at the Universidad Complutense de Madrid and worked as a researcher at France Telecom research and development (R&D), before completing his doctoral dissertation on the automation of financial markets in 2003. He joined the Department of Information Systems at the London School of Economics for a postdoctoral project and, in 2004, received an international research grant from the Ville de Paris. His current research interest include social studies of finance, economic experiments, and the anthropology of calculation.

Linda Soneryd received her PhD in Sociology at Örebro University and is now Associate Professor based at Score (Stockholm Centre for Organizational Research), Sweden. Her research interests include public involvement, risk regulation, and experiments in deliberative inclusive processes. She is currently involved in studies on inclusive processes involving governmental authorities and stakeholders in three empirical fields: mobile phones, nuclear waste, and agricultural biotechnology. She has published articles in journals such as Science, Technology & Human Values and Public Understanding of Science.

Renita Thedvall received her PhD in Social Anthropology at Stockholm University and is now Senior Research Fellow at Score, Stockholm Centre for Organizational Research at Stockholm University and Stockholm School of Economics. Her doctoral thesis focused on the European Union, the ‘Social Europe’, and the use of employment and social indicators to measure, audit, and compare member states to make them transparent. Recent publications include her dissertation ‘Eurocrats at work: negotiating transparency in postnational employment policy’ (Stockholm Studies in Social Anthropology, 58, 2006).

Anja Timm is Senior Research Fellow in Education at Southampton University. She received her PhD from the London School of Economics based on her dissertation, ‘The production of ambition: the making of a Baltic business elite’, which was based on ethnographic fieldwork conducted in Latvia. Anja has taught and conducted research at a number of universities across the UK and abroad. Until recently, she co-ordinated a project on international students and academic writing which involved field research in China, India and Greece (whilst based at Lancaster University in the Department of Organization, Work and Technology). Her research interests include the anthropology of organizations, policy and the globalization of higher education.

Mattias Viktorin received his BA in social anthropology from Stockholm University in 2001. He was a Fulbright visiting scholar at the University of California, Berkeley in 2006–2007, and is currently a PhD Candidate at the Department of Social Anthropology in Stockholm. His research centres on the changing role of the military. More specifically, he is interested in how security, humanitarianism, and ethics intersect in emergent forms of engagements with the world. His publications include ‘The new military: from national defence and warfighting to international intervention and peacekeeping’, Statsvetenskaplig Tidskrift, 107(3), 2005, pp. 157–75.

Christopher Yenkey recently received his PhD in sociology from Cornell University. He is affiliated with the Center for the Study of Economy and Society, also at Cornell University, and his research focuses on economic sociology, especially the sociological mechanisms that form the foundations of market exchange. Christopher’s current research investigates the advent of market regulation as well as the diffusion of regulations across markets. He is also interested in the development of economic sociology as a discipline and has written on the intellectual roots of modern economic sociology in the USA, and is the editor of Accounts, the newsletter of the American Sociological Association’s (ASA’s) Section on Economic Sociology and the co-editor of the ASA’s Economic Sociology Course Materials Guide, Third Edition.