

Figures

2.1	The business relationship	17
2.2	Internationalization of the firm and the network setting	27
3.1	Danke in its strategic business network	33
3.2	Main impact of Danke's strategic business relationships	42
4.1	Danke's business network before 1976	47
4.2	Danke's business network between 1976 and 1980	48
4.3	Danke's business network after 1980	49
4.4	Main actions in the development of Danke's international expansion	51
4.5	Connected relationships	52
4.6	The influence of the relationship between Danke and Aspi	53
4.7	The influence of the relationship between Danke and Bitte	55
5.1	Foreign market entry from a traditional view	63
5.2	Foreign market entry from a business network perspective	64
5.3	Foreign market entry from a combined approach	69
6.1	Internationalization through extending ownership across borders	79
6.2	Internationalization of the subsidiary's external business network	80
6.3	Internationalization through the corporate business network	82
6.4	The original Aspa corporation	84
6.5	External and corporate internationalization – subsidiary variations	89
7.1	The subsidiary corporate context	94
7.2	The subsidiary business network context	95
7.3	The Embedded Multinational	97
8.1	The MNC subsidiary environment: direct and indirect relationships	108
8.2	External and corporate embeddedness at the subsidiary level	113
8.3a	Difference in corporate and external embeddedness in divisions (A–I)	117
8.3b	Difference in corporate and external embeddedness in divisions (J–T)	118
8.4	Direct embeddedness	119
8.5	Connected embeddedness	120

8.6	Subsidiaries' external and connected embeddedness	120
9.1	Sources of influence in the MNC	129
9.2	The network context of HQ-subsidiary control in the MNC	130
9.3	The expected relations between sources of power and HQ's formal control and actual influence over subsidiaries	135
9.4	Level of headquarters' control and influence over subsidiaries	137
9.5	Degree of HQ knowledge regarding subsidiary operations, and degree of subsidiary dependence on HQ	139
10.1	Determinants of subsidiary influence in MNCs in a business network setting	146
10.2	Determinants of a subsidiary's functional importance (systemic power) in a business network setting	149
10.3	Subsidiaries' influence and functional importance	150
10.4	The MNC (net) dependence on subsidiaries	151
11.1	A model of knowledge transfer in MNCs	159
11.2	Transfer of subsidiary knowledge in the MNC	160
11.3	HQ relations with the subsidiaries' external network partners	160
11.4	Difference between the opinions of subsidiaries and HQ on the degree of shared values	163
12.1	Learning from transfer	169
12.2	Learning from problem-solving	170
12.3	The MNC conceptualized as a pattern of industrial activities	172
12.4	Similarity-induced and complementarity-induced learning in the MNC	175
12.5	A model of learning in the Embedded Multinational	179
Appendix III	Corporate and external embeddedness at the subsidiary level	208