

Acknowledgements

Up to now the MIN program has published, apart from four doctoral theses, 24 articles and book chapters, as listed in Appendix II. The present book can be seen as an attempt to summarize and synthesize the different findings that have emerged from the program. We are therefore greatly indebted to our colleagues on the MIN program, Ulf Andersson, Cecilia Pahlberg and Peter Thilenius, who have all contributed to the task of collecting data from all the participating corporations, and, in a very substantial way, to ideas and line of thought presented below. Special thanks go also to the many managers who have contributed valuable insights and data to the study.

We would also like to acknowledge Davide Pisano for his excellent assistance in preparing the data for our empirical analysis in Chapter 8, and Nancy Adler for checking our English.

Finally we would like to thank the Handelsbanken Research Foundation and Centre for Innovation and Industrial Dynamics (CIND) for their financial support.
