Several people made this investigation possible. First of all, I would like to thank Professor Andrew M. Pettigrew. His patience, dedication and motivation could never be given adequate recognition. The meaning of the Spanish word ‘maestro’ would best illustrate the way in which Andrew has guided me throughout this journey. Without Andrew’s guidance this research would not have achieved the depth it attained.

My particular gratitude to Adriana Urquía and Santiago García Belmonte for their help in opening the doors of the companies and make it possible to collect the information needed to achieve the depth of research that was needed.

I would also like to thank IAE Business School, the institution to which I have a real feeling of belonging and commitment.

During this journey I made many friends whom I would like to thank. I offer my gratitude to Anupama Mohan, Sotirios Paroutis, Lud Marquez, Paul Norris and the Spark family. Santiago, Hugo and Ezequiel, my beloved friends from Argentina, were always there to help me and boost my morale. Thanks to them and their families. Javier Quintanilla played a fundamental role, not only in helping me to settle down in a different culture, but also for the beginning of a friendship for life.

Again, to Ethna and Andrew Pettigrew, but now as friends and part of my family. Without them this journey would have been impossible. Their constant affection and support were the pillars of strength that my family and myself needed to be able to finish this research. They not only replaced our families in Argentina, but became our family and friends in England forever.

My brother Damián, my mother Hayat and my father Imad deserve the warmest gratitude possible, their affection was indispensable during these four years in England. Finally, without the love and unconditional support of my wife and my son this journey would neither have been possible nor worthwhile. I dedicate this book to Gabriela, Nicolás and Sofía.
