

---

Boxes

---

1.1	The third sector and the question of definition	6
2.1	Introducing the Free Welfare Associations (FWAs)	22
2.2	The FWAs and local volunteering	27
2.3	Integrating the EU into the FWAs' policy agenda	34
2.4	The absorption of the Bürgerschaftliches Engagement agenda	37
3.1	The National Charter of Reciprocal Commitments	58
3.2	Associations and taxation	59
4.1	The origins and development of the NCVO	71
5.1	The 1998 'Solidarity Pact' between the government and the Third Sector Forum	104
6.1	The second National Plan for Volunteering 2001–04	132
7.1	The erosion of pillars	142
8.1	The exceptional economic prominence of Swedish cooperatives within the 'social economy'	162
8.2	Features of Swedish popular mass movement organizations	163
8.3	A periodization of third-sector–state relations in Sweden to 1990	164
8.4	Popular mass movement as 'marinade'	165
8.5	The 'opportunity structure' concept	178
9.1	A development strategy for the non-profit sector	190
9.2	Neo-liberal questioning the legitimacy of NGO contributions to politics	199
10.1	The French–European 'second left' social economy policy nexus in the late 1980s and early 1990s	211
10.2	Shifting national positions within CEDAG between the 1990s and mid-2000s	223
11.1	'Local social capital': disabling ambiguity in meaning and purpose	248
12.1	Increased involvement of user groups	260
13.1	The 'modernization' of the EES	279
13.2	The third sector and EU Employment Guidelines 1997–2007	280
14.1	Membership of the Convention on the Future of Europe	296
14.2	Venues and contributions in the Convention process	299
14.3	Components of Constitutional draft, June 2003	301
15.1	The UN approach to conceptualizing volunteering	321
16.1	The role of voluntary associations and foundations in Europe	353
16.2	The 2000 Discussion Paper, the 2001 Governance White Paper and the third sector	355
16.3	The 'Services of General Interest' debate	358
16.4	Civil dialogue	360