

Acknowledgements

Many people have been helpful to us in the course of this project. Hakan Berument, Christine Gerberding, Dieter Nautz, Stephen Turnovsky and David VanHoose read and commented on the whole manuscript or parts thereof. Many students in graduate and undergraduate courses at the University of Canterbury, the J.W. Goethe-University of Frankfurt, and the University of North Carolina have made useful comments on draft chapters of the book. Participants in the summer intern program at the Deutsche Bundesbank provided valuable feedback on several chapters. Stanley Black, Patrick Conway, Michael Salemi and Roger Waud have influenced the book through many conversations on specific material and on the general topics covered here. A special debt is owed to Arthur Benavie who jointly authored papers that in adapted form enter many of the chapters of the book. For their help in bringing the project to completion we wish to thank Alan Sturmer and Robert Pickens at Edward Elgar.

