Contributors

Richard Arena is a Professor at LATAPSES (CNRS) at the University of Nice-Sophia Antipolis in France. He has published widely on the history of economic thought and he specializes in authors from the Austrian School.

Paul A. David is Professor Emeritus of Economics at Stanford University, where for half the year he lectures on the economics of science and technology and participates in the training of graduate students in economics. As a Senior Fellow of the Stanford Institute for Economic Policy Research, he is responsible for their Knowledge, Networks and Institutions for Innovation Program. During the second half of his year he is based in Oxford, where he is an Emeritus Fellow of All Souls College, and Senior Fellow of the Oxford Internet Institute.

Philippe Dulbecco is a Professor of Economics at the University of the Auvergne at Clermont Ferrand, France. He is presently Scientific Advisor for Economics for the Minister for Higher Education. His research is in the fields of the economic analysis of institutions, market process, theory of the firm and economic development.

Véronique Dutraive is an Assistant Professor of Economics at University ‘Lumière’ in Lyon, France. Her research is in the fields of old institutional economics, evolutionary economics, epistemology, theory of the firm and of the market.

Christopher Freeman is Professor Emeritus of Science Policy at the University of Sussex, UK, where he was the founder and first director of the Science Policy and Research Unit (SPRU). His publications include As Time Goes By: From the Industrial Revolutions to the Information Revolution (with Francisco Louçã, 2001) and The Economics of Industrial Innovation (with Luc Soete, 1997). He holds honorary doctorates from the Universities of Linköping, Sussex, Middlesex, Birmingham and Brighton.

Sandye Gloria-Palermo is Professor of Economics at the University of the French West Indies. She is the author of The Evolution of Austrian Alan P. Kirman is Professor of Economics at GREQAM at the University of Aix-Marseille. He has held a number of visiting professorships and has published widely in leading journals in economics. With Mark Salmon he edited Learning and Rationality in Economics (1995), with Mauro Gallegati he edited Beyond the Representative Agent (1999) and with Louis-André Gérard-Varet he edited Economics Beyond the Millennium (1999). His website is http://www.vcharite.univ-mrs.fr/PP/kirman/index.html.

Jan Kregel, former Chief of the Policy Analysis and Development Branch of the United Nations Financing for Development Office, is currently Distinguished Research Professor at the University of Missouri at Kansas City. Before joining the UN he was Professor of Economics in the Università degli Studi di Bologna, Italy as well as Professor of International Economics in the Johns Hopkins University Paul H. Nitze School of Advanced International Studies where he has also served as Associate Director of its Bologna Center from 1987–90.

Brian J. Loasby is Honorary and Emeritus Professor at the University of Stirling, Scotland. He is author of five books, including Choice, Complexity and Ignorance (1976) and Knowledge, Institutions and Evolution in Economics (1999 – joint winner of the Schumpeter Prize 2000) and 100 articles. His principal interest is the organization and development of knowledge, in economics and in economic systems.

J. Stanley Metcalfe is Stanley Jevons Professor of Political Economy and Cobden Lecturer at the University of Manchester. He is the author of Evolutionary Economics and Creative Destruction (1998). His research interests are currently focused upon evolutionary economics and the modelling of evolutionary processes in relation to innovation, competition and economic growth.
Bart Nooteboom is Professor of Innovation Policy at Tilburg University, the Netherlands. His research interests include innovation, entrepreneurship, organizational learning, inter-firm collaboration and networks, and trust. He has published six books and 200 papers on these and related topics. He is a member of the Royal Netherlands Academy of Arts and Sciences.

J.W. Stoelhorst is Assistant Professor at the Amsterdam Business School of the University of Amsterdam, where he teaches strategy and organization. He is one of the coordinators of the EAEPE research area ‘The Ontological Foundations of Evolutionary Economics’. His research interests are in evolutionary theory and its application in economics and management theory, with special emphasis on the intersection of theories of competitive advantage, theories of the firm and theories of technological change.

Margherita Turvani is currently Associate Professor of Economics at the Department of Planning, University IUAV of Venice where she teaches Public Economics and Urban Economics. She has written in the field of labour economics, history of economic thought, institutional economics, innovation and knowledge economics. Her present research interests are in the study of sustainable development.