Credits and acknowledgements

The editors wish to thank several individuals and organizations for their assistance in making this book possible. These are not in order of importance, as all of them contributed significantly to this challenge over a span of several years.

First we want to acknowledge the role of Texas A&M University’s Bush School of Government and Public Service, where both of the editors teach homeland security in the graduate program. Much of the understanding of the emerging field covered in this book comes from our having also taught at the following educational institutions: the National War College, the United States Military Academy at West Point, and Monroe College. We would also like to thank our former business partners at the Anser Institute for Homeland Security and Numeria Incorporated.

Several individuals in particular made contributions without which this two-volume book would never have come into being. Dean Alexander contributed chapters based on his previous book, Business Confronts Terrorism: Risks and Responses (University of Wisconsin Press, 2004). Our wonderful young friend Geoff Williams in Cincinnati contributed a chapter about Neal Saiff’s heroic actions on 9/11. Based on his demonstrated skills and readiness to help, we asked him to interview and write about Neal Saiff’s heroic actions on 9/11. In addition, Geoff turned John Brady’s briefing slides into a chapter about ConocoPhillips during Hurricane Katrina. Thank you, Geoff.

Some of the finest analysis in our book came from an earlier white paper developed by the brilliant staff at Deloitte, written by Greg Pellegrino and Bill Eggers. In addition, Bill provided us with a totally new article analyzing the need for improved networked government–private sector response during disasters like Katrina.

Ken Senser took time from his incredibly busy schedule as head of security at the world’s largest corporation to write an excellent chapter for us. Jason Jackson joined Ken in creating this interesting case study. We met Ken while working with the government–private sector task force for homeland security convened by Business Executives for National Security in Washington, DC, at the request of the US Senate Majority Leader and the Speaker of the House of Representatives. Ken also allowed us to interview him on the program ‘Homeland Security, Inside and Out’ which is broadcast and streamed via the Internet each week by radio stations KAMU in the Southwest and WAMU in the Washington, DC area.

Fred Burton, Frank Rodman and Dr Michael Minor joined us along with others for a workshop at Texas A&M in College Station in the summer of 2005, in which we discussed many of the ideas that later we incorporated into our book. Experts who contributed previously written pieces included Kevin Lindsey and Paul Kurtz at the Cyber Security Industry Alliance, General and Chief of Staff of the US Army (Retired) Dennis Reimer, Dan Verton, Brent Woodworth at IBM Corporation, and Dr Robin Hanson.

The remainder of our book’s contributors dedicated large chunks of their valuable time to create entirely new chapters for our book in areas of their special expertise. This they did with no compensation except the knowledge that others would benefit from... their knowledge and seminal thinking in the field of business and homeland security. We deeply appreciate their effort which clearly was above and beyond the call of normal workplace demands.

Lest we forget those whose work must not go unsung, four people deserve special recognition for their exceptional organizational and administrative talents. Alan Sturmer at Edward Elgar Publishing first realized the potential for this book while visiting us in College Station, and he became our champion both inside and outside of his company. Heather Perkins at Edward Elgar took charge of the monumental task of editing a manuscript that grew much larger than expected and consistently ignored many of the editorial guidelines so kindly provided to us in the beginning. When the book was in danger of running aground on the authors’ personal calendars, Marilyn Lewis stepped in and rescued it by completing the critical final editing process.

And finally, a gifted student at Monroe College proofread most of the book’s manuscript. Germaine Mendez accomplished this thankless job with great success, after being given only the instructions, ‘Please fix our formats, spelling, grammar, punctuation, and word choice. And while you’re at it, correct the facts where necessary.’ She did all of this and more. Thank you.

William I. Hancock
David H. McIntyre