

Contributors

Duco Bannink, PhD, works as a lecturer at the University of Twente, School of Management and Governance, Department of Social Risks and Safety Studies. His teaching and research concerns the implementation and reform of social policies at the EU and national levels. He is currently involved in an EU Sixth Framework research project on Work Organisation and Restructuring in the Knowledge Society (WORKS). Recent publications are Hidden Change (with Marcel Hoogenboom 2007) and various articles on pension reform (with Bert de Vroom).

Marek Benio is a researcher and teacher at the Department of Public Economy and Administration, Cracow University of Economics, Poland. His PhD in economics (2002) was devoted to Employees Pension Schemes in Poland. His academic interests encompass social security, labour law and public administration. He has participated in a number of international research projects. Recent publications include: 'Invisible Privatisation of Social Insurance', ZNAE nr 714/2006, Cracow; 'Pension System Reforms in Central and Eastern Europe', in: D. Rosati (ed.): New Europe; 'Report on Transformation', Instytut Wschodni Sorry, Krynica (with Jerzy Hausner).

Fabio Bertozzi is scientific collaborator at the social policy unit of the Swiss Graduate School of Public Administration (IDHEAP) in Lausanne, Switzerland. He has taken part in several national and international research projects in the area of comparative welfare state analysis, with a special focus on pensions and labour market policies. His publications include 'Swiss worlds of welfare', West European Politics, 1(4) 2004, pp. 20–44 (with K. Armingeon and G. Bonoli) and 'The Swiss welfare state: a changing public–private mix?' (in D. Béland and B. Gran, eds, Social Policy Puzzles, Palgrave Macmillan, forthcoming, with F. Gilardi).

Giuliano Bonoli is Professor of Social Policy at the Swiss Graduate School for Public Administration (IDHEAP), Lausanne, Switzerland. He received his PhD at the University of Kent at Canterbury for a study on pension reform in Europe. He has been involved in several national and international research projects on the process of welfare state transformation. His recent key publications include: The Politics of Pension Reform: Institutions and Policy Change in Western Europe, Cambridge University Press, 2000 and Ageing and Pension Reform around the World: Evidence from Eleven Countries, Edward Elgar, 2005 (ed. with Toshimitsu Shinkawa).

Paul Bridgen is a senior lecturer in social policy at the University of Southampton. He was the joint academic coordinator (with Traute Meyer) of the EU 5th Framework project on which this book is based. He has several publications on developments in British pensions policy from the end of the Second World War to the present day. He has also published on ageing and health and social care policy. He is currently working (with Traute Meyer) on a project on occupational pensions in Britain and Germany as part of the Anglo-German Foundation's Creating Sustainable Growth in Europe research initiative.

Bert de Vroom is sociologist and head of the Social Risks and Safety Studies Department, at the University of Twente, the Netherlands. He is and has been involved in various international comparative and national research projects and has published widely on issues such as changing labour markets, welfare state policies, new risks, early retirement and pensions. He has co-ordinated the European COST A13 research group, Ageing and Work. At the moment he is involved in the OECD project on disabilities and transitions, and in the Cinefogo Network of Excellence on the making of European citizenship.

Traute Meyer is a senior lecturer in social policy at the University of Southampton. She has participated in international research projects in the area of pensions, informal and care work. She is the co-editor of the European Journal of Social Policy. Publications include: 'Gender arrangements and pension systems in Britain and Germany', International Journal of Ageing and Later Life (2006, with B. Pfau-Effinger); 'When do benevolent capitalists change their mind? Explaining the retrenchment of defined-benefit pensions in Britain', Social Policy and Administration (2005); and 'Class, gender and chance and the social division of welfare', forthcoming 2008, in Ageing and Society (both with P. Bridgen).

Michele Raitano obtained a PhD in economics from University of Rome La Sapienza in 2004. Currently he is a research fellow at Istituto Studi Analisi Economica and the University La Sapienza and collaborates with the Italian government about the pension reform process. His main research topics are welfare state systems, with a special focus on pensions, an area on which he has published many papers. He is a contributing author to the annual Welfare State Report (Rapporto sullo Stato Sociale) edited by Professor F.R. Pizzuti and issued by the Department of Public Economy of the University of Rome (La Sapienza) and the Centro Interuniversitario sullo Stato Sociale.

Joanna Ratajczak-Tuchołka is a teacher and research assistant at the Department of Labour and Social Policy at Poznan University of Economics in Poland, where she earned her PhD. Her research focuses on social policy and social security, and she is particularly interested in the gender-specific impact of pension systems. Her PhD concentrated on how pension insurance influenced the situation of German and Polish women in old age.

Barbara Riedmüller is professor at the Political Science Department of the Freie Universität Berlin. Her main research focus is the German welfare state, analysed in the context of change in European countries. She carried out research on social policy and social inclusion, and on pension reform in European countries. She has advised high-level German social policy-makers regarding the consequences of German pension reforms for social inclusion.

Michaela Willert received her diploma in sociology from the Freie Universität Berlin. She works as senior research assistant at the Political Science Department of the FU. Her research interest is in comparative welfare state research, particularly pension policy. Moreover she examines trends of Europeanization of social policy.