Acknowledgements

This book started from a series of coincidences, evolved into a test of persistence and patience, and culminated in a series of good fortunes the most significant of which was to see one’s long-awaited aspiration realised.

It has certainly not been a smooth ride throughout as there have been many moments of frustration, questioning and disbelief, together with many moments of challenge, excitement and great fulfilment.

The various stages of the manuscript travelled with me across countries, and have certainly filled me with many experiences that I have grown with and for which I am most grateful.

I owe my most profound and sincere gratitude to my supervisor, Prof. Ullrich, who has provided me with great support, understanding and words of wisdom.

I am also deeply grateful to the following people who have helped me with their support and useful comments: Prof. Shelanski, Prof. Joerges, Prof. Lemley, Prof. Blackburn, Prof. Barton, Prof. Lévêque, Luk Peepercorn, Sandro Paollicchi, Dimitrios Giotakos, Dr Alan Riley, Dr Barry Rodger, Emanuela Lecchi, Andreas Avgousti, Katherine Llorca and many more.

My warmest thanks are due to the European University Institute for the support and funding they granted me over the years as well as my funding body, the Department of Education and Skills. I would also like to thank the University of California, Berkeley and European Commission, DG COMP who, during my stay there, were instrumental in helping my research. I am also grateful to the members of CLASF for listening to drafts of my papers and providing me with comments, Charles Russell LLP as well as to the TRA (Bahrain).

I am, of course, most grateful to my publisher, Edward Elgar and the people therein who gave me their support, particularly Luke Adams, Jo Betteridge and Kate Pearce.

Most of all, I would like to thank my friends and family without whose support this experience would not have been so remarkable: Mum and Alexia thanks for listening during my many hours of frustration; Yianni and Eleni thanks for providing me with immeasurable entertainment; Manoli thanks for supporting me in the finish!
