Chapter 11 Pondering over the incident of Songhua River pollution from the perspective of environmental law

Wang Canfa, Yu Wen-xuan, Li Dan and Li Jun-hong

1 Introduction 291
2 Problems of China’s current environmental legislation through analysis of the Songhua River pollution incident 292
   2.1 The guiding legislation ideology is in deviation from the basic requirements of environmental protection 292
   2.2 Some important environmental legal systems are badly in need of establishment 294
   2.3 Some supplementary systems are needed in the current environmental legal system 296
      2.3.1 Environmental counter-emergency system 296
      2.3.2 System for the settlement of administrative transregional environmental disputes 298
      2.3.3 Transboundary environmental disputes settlement system 299
   2.4 Relevant regulations need perfection 300
3 Ways to improve China’s environmental legislation 301
   3.1 Change the ideology and establish the basic principle of environmental legislation: social and economic development should be in harmony with environmental protection 301
      3.1.1 Precautionary principle should be carried out completely in the environmental legislation 302
      3.1.2 EIA on strategy, policy, law and plan should be given importance 303
      3.1.3 It is indispensable to improve the feasibility of environmental legislation and pay more attention to law enforcement 303
   3.2 Establish and perfect important environmental legal system 304
      3.2.1 System for compulsory environmental liability insurance 304
      3.2.2 Fund for environmental damage compensation 305
      3.2.3 Environmental counter-emergency system 306
      3.2.4 System for the settlement of administrative transregional environmental disputes 307
      3.2.5 System for the settlement of transboundary environmental disputes 308
   3.3 Revise relevant laws and regulations 308
4 The important step to improve China’s environmental legislation – the establishment of law of environmental damage compensation 309
