Contributors

Ilpo Airio received his PhD in social policy in 2008. He is a senior assistant in the Department of Social Policy at the University of Turku, Finland. His research interests are labour market poverty and social mobility.

Hans-Jürgen Andreß studied social sciences and research methods at the universities of Frankfurt/Main, Germany and Ann Arbor, USA. He gained his PhD at the University of Frankfurt/Main in 1983 and is at present Professor of Empirical Social and Economic Research at the University of Cologne, Germany. He has published in the field of labour markets, poverty research, social policy, and multivariate statistical methods.

Ferruccio Biolcati-Rinaldi studied sociology and research methods at the universities of Trento, Rome ‘La Sapienza’ and Naples ‘Federico II’ and at present he is a lecturer in methodology of social sciences at the University of Milan, Italy. He has published in the field of social policy evaluation, poverty research, and cultural consumption.

Jan de Boom studied sociology at the Erasmus University Rotterdam, the Netherlands. He is currently a researcher at Rotterdam Institute for Social Policy Research (RISBO). His research interests are immigration, immigrant integration, illegality and crime.

Sara Connolly studied economics and maths at Liverpool University, UK. She then moved to Oxford University where she gained her MPhil and DPhil in economics. Sara is currently a senior lecturer in economics at the University of East Anglia, UK. She has published in the fields of applied labour economics and the economics of public policy.

Godfried Engbersen is Professor of Sociology at the Erasmus University of Rotterdam, the Netherlands. He worked at the universities of Leiden, Amsterdam and Utrecht and was a visiting Professor at the Centre for Western European Studies at the University of California, Berkeley, USA. He has written extensively on new forms of social inequality and urban marginality in advanced welfare states.

Marco Gießelmann studied sociology and research methods at the universities of Bielefeld, Germany and Essex, UK. Currently he is a researcher at the University of Cologne (Chair for Empirical Social and Economic Research) and is preparing a PhD thesis on the working poor phenomenon in Germany.

Björn Halleröd is Professor of Sociology, Umeå University, Sweden. Since the mid-1980s he has worked extensively on issues related to income distribution, poverty and living conditions. He is currently looking at the relationship between different welfare problems and longitudinal research on individual changes in living conditions.

Susan Kuivalainen gained her PhD at the University of Turku, Finland in 2004 and is currently a Professor of Social Policy at the same university. She has published work in the field of social assistance and poverty research.

Daniel Larsson received his PhD in sociology 2006. He is a lecturer at the Department of Sociology in Umeå University, Sweden, and his research interests are poverty, criminology, social policy and the labour market.

Henning Lohmann is a research associate at the German Socio-Economic Panel Study at the German Institute for Economic Research (DIW Berlin), Germany. He is a sociologist, with a Master's degree from the University of Bielefeld and a doctorate from the University of Cologne. He has published on poverty, economic consequences of divorce and self-employment in comparative perspective.

Ive Marx is a senior researcher at the Centre for Social Policy, University of Antwerp, Belgium. He holds MSc degrees in economics and sociology and a PhD in political and social sciences. He has published extensively on the poverty and social policy consequences of labour market change in advanced economies.

Mikko Niemelä, PhD, is a senior researcher at the Social Insurance Institution of Finland. He has also been a visiting scholar at the Social Policy Research Centre at the University of New South Wales, Australia. His main areas of interest are the measurement of poverty and the intergenerational transmission of poverty. His recent publications include ‘Perceptions of the causes of poverty in Finland’ (Acta Sociologica, 2008) and (with Ilpo Airio and Pasi Moisio) ‘The intergenerational transmission of poverty in Finland in the 1990s’ (European Journal of Social Security, 2005).

Brian Nolan is Professor of Public Policy in the School of Applied Social Science, University College Dublin, Ireland. He worked for many years at the Economic and Social Research Institute, Dublin. He is an economist, with a PhD from the London School of Economics. He has published widely on income inequality, poverty, public economics, social policy, and health economics.
Federico Podestà studied sociology and economic sociology at the universities of Trento and Brescia, and at present he is a researcher at the Observatory on social and economic local systems of the University of Trento, Italy. He has published in the field of quantitative methods for comparative research, poverty and social exclusion, and political economy.

Erik Snel is affiliated to the Department of Sociology of the Erasmus University Rotterdam, the Netherlands. He has a PhD in sociology. His main fields of teaching are urban studies and urban policy. His research interests are urban developments and urban policy-making, immigration and immigrant integration, poverty and social exclusion.

Gerlinde Verbist is a senior researcher at the Centre for Social Policy, University of Antwerp, Belgium. She has a PhD in applied economics. Her main research interests include microsimulation modelling and applications, measurement of income inequality and redistribution, taxation, and the interaction between migration and the welfare state. She is a member of the LoWER and Equalsoc research networks.