Contributors

Henrik P. Bang is Associate Professor, Senior Lecturer and Coordinator of the Comparative Politics group in the Department of Political Science at the University of Copenhagen. His main fields of research are network governance and political participation, within which he has published extensively. Recent publications include articles in the journals Urban Research and Practice, British Politics and Administrative Theory and Praxis. He has also edited, with Anders Esmark, New Publics With/Out Democracy (2007), a critical analysis of the public sphere in an era of networks.

Mark Evans is Professor of Governance and Director of the Australia–New Zealand School of Government’s Institute of Governance at the University of Canberra. His published research focuses on four key areas: public administration and public policy; policy analysis; evaluating the impact of processes of globalisation on domestic policy formation; and post-war reconstruction and development. The research theme binding these together is the interest in institution-building and processes of governance. His books include: Constitution-making and the Labour Party (2004), Policy Transfer in Global Perspective (2005), New Directions in the Study of Policy Transfer (2009) and Understanding Competition States, with Neil Lunt (2009). He is also editor of the international journal Policy Studies.

David Farnham is Professor Emeritus at the University of Portsmouth and Visiting Professor at the University of Greenwich. He is former Senior Visiting Research Fellow at the Catholic University Leuven, Visiting Professor at the University of East London and Visiting Fellow at Glamorgan Business School. Specialising in human resources management and public sector employment, he is a board member of several public bodies and co-chair of the Public Personnel Policy study group of the European Group of Public Administration. Publications include Staff Participation and Public Management Reform: Some International Comparisons (with A. Hondehem and S. Horton) (2005) and Employment Relations in Europe: A Comparative and Critical Review, in E. De Weert and J. Enders, The Academic Profession: International Comparisons (2009).
John Fenwick is Professor of Leadership and Public Management at Newcastle Business School, Northumbria University. He teaches in the areas of public management, local government and organisational studies and has long-established research interests in public participation and policy research. He has completed a study of political management in local government and the role of executive mayors, and his current research relates to theoretical developments in public management, leadership structures in local government and cooperative models in secondary education. He has published Managing Local Government (1995) and a range of papers in journals such as Local Government Studies, Public Money and Management and Public Policy and Administration.

Paul H.A. Frissen is Professor of Public Administration at Tilburg University and member of the Council for Societal Development, an advisory body for the cabinet and parliament. He is also Dean and Chairman of the Board of the Netherlands School of Public Administration, a training institution for higher officials in government and the public sector, and a think-tank in The Hague. He has published De Versplinterde Staat (The Fragmented State, 1991); De Virtuele Staat (The Virtual State, 1996) (translated as Politics, Governance, Technology: A Postmodern Narrative on the Virtual State, 1996); De Lege Staat (The Empty State, 1999); De Staat. Een Drieluik (The State. A Tryptich, 2002); De Staat van Verschil. Een Kritiek van de Gelijkheid (The State of Difference. A Critique of Equality, 2007), and Gevaar verplicht. Over de noodzaak van aristocratische politiek (The Obligation of Danger. On the Necessity of Aristocratic Politics, 2009).

Andrew Massey is Professor of Public Administration, Department of Politics at the University of Exeter. Prior to this he was Associate Dean at the University of Portsmouth and has taught at Queen Mary, University of London and Salford University. He is the Director of the Masters in Public Administration (MPA) degree at Exeter and researches on public sector reform and modernisation. He is the author of numerous books and articles on these subjects. He has also produced reports for and advised the British Cabinet Office and HM Treasury as well as the National Audit Office. He regularly contributes to the work of the Public Management and Policy Association (part of the Chartered Institute of Public Accountants) and has been the Chair of the UK’s Joint University Council.

Janice McMillan is Lecturer in Public Management and Human Resource Development at Edinburgh Napier University. She has held previous posts at Northumbria University, Robert Gordon University and Nottingham
Trent University. Current teaching includes public management, human resource development and leadership, and she has published widely in these areas. With John Fenwick she has undertaken several research projects into learning, governance and public management and is co-author of Decentralizing the Civil Service: From Unitary State to Differentiated Polity in the United Kingdom (2003) (with Rod Rhodes, Paul Carmichael and Andrew Massey). She was Chair of the Political Studies Association Public Administration Specialist Group 1995–2005.

Wayne Parsons is Professor of Public Policy at Queen Mary, University of London. He is currently Visiting Professor in policy sciences at FLACSO, Mexico and the Catholic University of Lille. His research interests cover the fields of public management, economic policy and policy analysis. Amongst his books are The Political Economy of British Regional Policy (1986), Keynes and the Quest for a Moral Science (1997), The Power of the Financial Press (1990) and Public Policy (1995). He has served on the editorial boards of a number of journals, including Policy Sciences, Journal of European Public Policy, Politics and Policy and Contemporary Wales.

B. Guy Peters is Maurice Falk Professor of American Government at the University of Pittsburgh and Distinguished Professor of Comparative Governance at Zeppelin University, Friedrichshafen, Germany. A specialist in comparative public policy and administration, he has published extensively in journals including Public Administration Review, Policy Sciences and Public Administration, and is currently co-editor of the European Political Science Review and associate editor of the Journal of Comparative Policy Analysis. Among his recent publications are The Coordination of Public Sector Organizations: Shifting Patterns of Public Management (2010) (with Geert Bouckaert and Koen Verhoest) and The Politics of Bureaucracy: An Introduction to Comparative Public Administration (6th edn, 2009).