Contributors

René M. Bakker is a PhD candidate at the Department of Organization Studies at Tilburg University in the Netherlands. He holds a Master’s degree from the same university. René undertook part of his studies at the University of Arizona (USA) and the University of Pretoria (South Africa). His research interests include temporary forms of work organization, time and organization theory, and leadership.

Bart Cambré is assistant professor at the Department of Organization Studies at Tilburg University in the Netherlands. He received a Master’s degree in sociology at the Katholieke Universiteit Leuven (Belgium) and another in developmental studies at U.C. Louvain-la-Neuve (Belgium). He holds a PhD in research methodology in the social sciences (K.U. Leuven) and teaches courses on research methodology, organization sociology and interorganizational relationships in undergraduate and graduate programs. His research interests include temporary work systems, quality of work and the methodology of organizational research.

Paul C. van Fenema is an associate professor at the Netherlands Defence Academy and an assistant professor at the Department of Organization Studies at Tilburg University in the Netherlands. He received a Master’s degree in law and economics at Utrecht University and his PhD in business administration from Erasmus University in Rotterdam. He has also worked at Rotterdam School of Management and Florida International University. His research interests include intra- and interorganizational coordination, organizational drifting, knowledge management, crisis and military organizations, and use of information systems. His work has been published in, amongst others, MIS Quarterly, Journal of International Business Studies, Information Systems Journal, European Journal of Information Systems and International Journal of Project Management.

Tobias Gössling is an assistant professor at the Department of Organization Studies at Tilburg University in the Netherlands. He holds a PhD in political science from Witten/Herdecke University in Germany. His research focuses on institutions, interorganizational relations and relations between organizations and society (corporate social responsibility).
Martyna Janowicz-Panjaitan is a research fellow at the Department of Organization Studies at Tilburg University in the Netherlands. She received her PhD in organization and strategy from the Center for Economic Research at Tilburg University. Her research interests focus on international strategic alliances, interorganizational learning, trust, temporary organizations and economies in transition. Her work has been published or is forthcoming in such journals as Research Policy, Organization Studies, Journal of Management Studies and European Management Review.

Jeroen P.J. de Jong is a researcher at EIM Business and Policy Research in the Netherlands, and is also an assistant professor at RSM Erasmus University in Rotterdam in the Netherlands. His research interests include user innovation, open innovation, innovation in SMEs and intrapreneurship.

Patrick Kenis is academic dean at TiasNimbas Business School and professor of policy and organization studies at the Department of Organization Studies at Tilburg University in the Netherlands. He holds a PhD from the European University Institute (Florence, Italy) and a Master’s degree from the Free University of Brussels (Belgium). Over the last 15 years he has taught organization sociology, organization theory, network analysis and interorganizational relations in undergraduate, graduate and executive programs. His current research interests involve temporary organizations, organizational networks and internet communities. His work has been published in the Academy of Management Review, International Public Management Journal, Journal of Theoretical Politics, Journal of Public Administration, Research and Theory. He has also authored and co-authored a number of book chapters and books.

Jan M.P. de Kok is a senior researcher at EIM Business and Policy Research in the Netherlands. He holds a PhD in economics from Erasmus University in Rotterdam in the Netherlands. He received a Master’s degree in economics and econometrics at Tilburg University. He has held research positions at Erasmus University and the University of Amsterdam. His research interests include entrepreneurship and human resource management within small and medium-sized enterprises.

Joris Knoben is an assistant professor in the Department of Organization Studies as well as a core fellow of the Center for Innovation Research at Tilburg University in the Netherlands. He holds a PhD in organization studies and a Master’s degree in economics, both from Tilburg University.
His research interests lie at the intersections of regional economics, organization science and innovation studies.

Gerardus J.M. Lucas is a PhD student at the Center for Innovation Research at Tilburg University in the Netherlands. He holds a Master’s degree in organization and another in social and behavioral sciences from Tilburg University, and also a Bachelor of Arts degree from Maastricht University. He studies the role of performance feedback on the impetus to engage in innovation and innovation enabling behaviors.

Marius T.H. Meeus is a professor of strategy, innovation and organization learning at the Department of Organization Studies at Tilburg University in the Netherlands. At present, he is also the director of the Center for Innovation Research at Tilburg University. He has held positions at Utrecht University and at Eindhoven University as well. He was involved in founding ECIS, the Copernicus Institute for sustainability and innovation. He is a NIAS (Netherlands Institute for Advanced Study in the Humanities and Social Sciences) fellow, and was a member of the editorial board of Organization Studies. He has contributed to conferences and reports of the Dutch Scientific Council for Government Policy and the Dutch Innovation Platform. His research interests include R&D management, innovation systems, innovation networks, organizational change, social and individual learning, biotechnology, environmental innovation, hydrogen research, transition trajectories, high performance organizations, IPOs (Initial Public Offerings), business models, technological opportunities and many other topics. His work has been published in, amongst others, Research Policy, Technology Analysis and Strategic Management, Journal of Social and Economic Geography, Review of Industrial Organization, Organization Studies, Industry and Innovation and Regional Studies.

Leon A.G. Oerlemans is a professor of organizational dynamics at the Department of Organization Studies at Tilburg University in the Netherlands, and an extraordinary professor of the economics of innovation in the Department of Engineering and Technology Management at the University of Pretoria in South Africa. He is also co-founder of the Center for Innovation Research at Tilburg University. His research focuses on the analysis of innovative behavior of (temporary) organizations in general and innovation and networks in particular. His work has been published in books and journals, including Regional Studies, Economic Geography, Research Policy, Organization Studies, Technological Forecasting and Social Change, South African Journal of Science and the International Journal of Management Reviews.
Temporary organizations

Keith G. Provan is the McClelland professor in Eller College of Management at the University of Arizona in the United States. He is also a visiting senior scholar at Tilburg University in the Netherlands. His research interests have centered around the study of interorganizational and network relationships, including network structure, evolution, governance and effectiveness. His empirical work on these topics has focused on public and not-for-profit health and human service agencies, as well as business firms. He has published more than 50 articles in scholarly journals and is one of only 33 members of the Academy of Management’s ‘Journals Hall of Fame’.

Jörg Raab is an assistant professor of policy and organization studies at the Department of Organization Studies at Tilburg University in the Netherlands. He received his PhD from the University of Konstanz in Germany. His research has focused mainly on topics in organization theory (especially interorganizational networks), public organizations and governance mechanisms. His current research is mainly on temporary organizations, organizational networks and dark networks as organizational problems. His work has been published in journals such as the International Public Management Journal, Journal of Theoretical Politics and Journal of Public Administration, Research and Theory, and he has authored or co-authored a number of book chapters and books.

Joseph Soeters is a professor of management and organization studies at the Netherlands Defence Academy and also at Tilburg University in the Netherlands. He is also affiliated with TiasNimbas Business School at Tilburg University. He is an organizational sociologist with a research focus on international management, international military cooperation and related issues such as diversity management, language management and cultural studies. He is a vice-president of Research Committee 01 on Armed Forces and Conflict Resolution of the International Sociological Association.

Patrick A.M. Vermeulen is an associate professor of organization studies in the Department of Organization Studies at Tilburg University in the Netherlands. He received his PhD from the Nijmegen School of Management and previously worked at the Rotterdam School of Management. His main research interests focus upon processes of institutional change, strategies for the Base-of-the-Pyramid and sustainable development. His work has been published in, amongst others, Organization Studies, International Journal of Research in Marketing, Journal of Small Business Management, Long Range Planning, International Small Business Journal and Technovation.
Erik J. de Waard teaches business strategy and organizational design at the Netherlands Defence Academy (NLDA). He is currently preparing his PhD on the role of absorptive capacity, modular organizing and lateral coordination as key organizational enablers to align strategic, structural and operational dynamic capabilities within the Dutch armed forces.