Contributors

Kym Anderson is George Gollin Professor of Economics and Foundation Executive Director of the Centre for International Economic Studies (CIES) at the University of Adelaide in Australia, where he has been affiliated since 1984 following six years as a Research Fellow at the Australian National University’s Institute for Advanced Studies. In 2004–07 he was on extended leave at the World Bank’s Development Economics Research Group in Washington DC as Lead Economist (Trade Policy). Before that he spent 1990–92 in the Research Division of the GATT Secretariat in Geneva. He has also served as a Panellist in WTO dispute settlement cases.

David Blandford is Professor of Agricultural and Environmental Economics, and former department head, in the Department of Agricultural Economics and Rural Sociology at the Pennsylvania State University. He was formerly a division director at the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development (OECD) in Paris and a Professor at Cornell University. Blandford was the president of the Agricultural Economics Society of the United Kingdom in 2010/11. He teaches courses in agri-business at Penn State and conducts research into food and agricultural policies, including their environmental, trade and rural development aspects.

Michael Cardwell is Professor of Agricultural Law at the University of Leeds. After working in legal practice with Burges Salmon, Bristol, he joined the School of Law, University of Leeds, in 1990. His early research was directed towards agricultural tenancies and European Community quota regimes. More recently, he has also addressed the broader legal issues generated by the reform of the EU’s Common Agricultural Policy and, in particular, its compatibility with world trade obligations. His publications include The European Model of Agriculture (OUP, 2004).

Ignacio Carreño is a lawyer for the International Trade and Food Law team of FratiniVergano, a law firm based in Brussels, where he is responsible for internal market, agriculture and food law. He holds a Master’s degree in EU law from the University Carlos III Madrid. He graduated in law at the University Bielefeld and has been practising in Brussels since 2000. He specialises in EU food and agricultural law and has worked on a number of court cases at the General Court of the EU and on issues such as the free movement of agricultural products and foodstuffs within the EU, WTO market access, sanitary and phytosanitary regulation and technical barriers to trade. Ignacio is a member of the Düsseldorf and Brussels Bars.

Melaku Geboye Desta is a Reader in International Economic Law and director of the PhD Programme at the Centre for Energy, Petroleum and Mineral Law and Policy at the University of Dundee. His research and teaching interests include WTO law, agriculture, energy, trade and development, international business transactions and international arbitration. Melaku has published widely in the areas of WTO and agriculture, trade and energy, and regional trade agreements. He also consults for governments, law firms and international organisations on international trade law and policy issues.

Graham Dutfield is Professor of International Governance at Leeds University School of Law. He has a keen scholarly interest in the law, science and the business of bio-technical innovation from the Enlightenment to the present. Other research areas include intellectual property and health, agriculture, and traditional knowledge. Recent books include Intellectual Property Rights and the Life Science Industries: Past, Present and Future (2nd edn), Global Intellectual Property Law (with U. Suthersanen), and Intellectual Property and Human Development: Current Trends and Future Scenarios (edited with T. Wong).

Christian Häberli is a Senior Research Fellow at the World Trade Institute, University of Bern (Switzerland). Christian’s professional career in development, trade and agriculture has included postings in Madagascar, Thailand, Nepal and Switzerland. From 1978 to 1982 he worked for the International Labour Organisation (ILO) and from 1983 to 2007 for the Swiss Government. He completed his legal studies with a PhD on the subject of African Investment Law (1979); he also obtained a degree at the Institut Universitaire d’Etudes du Développement in Geneva (1975) and another in theology (Bern, 2009). As a representative for Switzerland at the WTO, he has chaired the Committee on Agriculture (Regular Session) and since 1996 has also served in five dispute settlement panels, namely EC – Bananas III, Japan – Apples, EC – Biotech (GMO), China – Trading Rights
Lee Ann Jackson is a Counsellor in the Agriculture and Commodities Division at the World Trade Organization, where she has been involved in the Doha Development Round agricultural negotiations as well as implementation of the SPS Agreement, including WTO dispute settlement activities. Prior to joining the WTO, she held positions at the School of Economics at the University of Adelaide in South Australia and at the International Food Policy Research Institute. She has a PhD in applied economics, a joint Master's degree in public policy and environmental studies, and a degree in biology.

Tim Josling is Professor Emeritus at the (former) Food Research Institute at Stanford University; a Senior Fellow at the Freeman Spogli Institute for International Studies; and a faculty member at FSI's Europe Center. His research focuses on agricultural policy and food policy in industrialised nations; international trade in agricultural and food products; and the development of the multilateral trade regime. He is currently studying the reform of the agricultural trading system in the World Trade Organization; the use of geographical indications; the role of health and safety regulations in trade; the impact of climate change legislation on agricultural trade policies; and the treatment of biofuel subsidies in the WTO.

Eugenia Laurenza is a lawyer for the International Trade and Food Law team of FratiniVergano, a law firm based in Brussels, where she is responsible for EU and international trade law and food law. Eugenia graduated in law from the University of Rome, La Sapienza, and holds an LLM in European and International Trade Law from the Universiteit van Amsterdam. She has been practising in Brussels since 2005. Eugenia’s main practice areas are WTO law and dispute settlement procedures, trade negotiations (bilateral and multilateral) in the areas of agriculture and services, market access, sanitary and phytosanitary standards, technical barriers to trade, subsidies, and regional integration. Eugenia is also a member of the Rome and Brussels Bars (‘E’ list).

Alan Matthews is Professor Emeritus of European Agricultural Policy in the Department of Economics, Trinity College Dublin, Ireland, where he was formerly Head of the Department of Economics and Director of the Institute for International Integration Studies. His major research interests include agricultural policy analysis, the impact of EU policies on developing countries, and the design of WTO trade rules for agriculture. He has worked as a consultant to the OECD, the Food and Agriculture Organisation of the United Nations, the World Bank and the European Commission, and has also been a panel member in a number of WTO dispute settlement cases.

Joseph A. McMahon is Professor of Commercial Law in the School of Law at University College Dublin, Ireland. His research interests include agriculture, both within the WTO and the EU, as well as the Development Cooperation Policies of the EU. He has also acted as a consultant on the SPS and TBT Agreements to projects in Mauritius and Indonesia. His recent works include The Agreement on Agriculture (Oxford University Press, 2006) and The Negotiations for a New Agreement on Agriculture (Brill USA, 2011).

Fiona Smith is Senior Lecturer in the Faculty of Laws, University College London (UCL). Her research principally focuses on agriculture and the WTO. She is particularly interested in how philosophical thought can reveal new dimensions to the problem of international agricultural trade regulation. She has spoken about her work throughout the world and has published a number of articles, as well as being the author of Agriculture and the WTO: Towards a New Theory of International Agricultural Trade Regulation (2009, Edward Elgar). Fiona is also co-Director of the WTO Scholars’ Forum, Sidley Austin, Geneva.

Stephanie Switzer is a Lecturer in Law at the University of Dundee, Scotland. She was recently awarded her PhD in Law from University College Dublin and is interested in trade and development as well as the broader question of how the trade regime should respond to the challenges posed by the increased trade in biofuels.