Contributors

Julie Debeljak is a Senior Lecturer in the Faculty of Law and Deputy Director of the Castan Centre for Human Rights Law at Monash University, Victoria, Australia. She has a particular interest in the field of international human rights law and comparative domestic protection of human rights, including bills of rights. Dr Debeljak completed her LLM with First Class Honours at the University of Cambridge, and was an intern with the Indigenous Peoples Team at the UN Office of the High Commissioner for Human Rights in 1998. In 2001, she was awarded a Fulbright Scholarship to attend a summer course on American constitutional law at Boston College. Dr Debeljak was awarded her PhD in 2004; her thesis examined comparative domestic human rights protection, focusing on Australia, Canada and the United Kingdom. Dr Debeljak is a Chief Investigator on the Australian Research Council Linkage project ‘Australia’s Response to Trafficking in Women: A Model for the Regulation of Forced Migration in the Asia-Pacific Region?’ She has published on various human rights topics, and has extensive professional experience, predominantly working with domestic and international governments on the implementation of human rights obligations. In addition, Dr Debeljak has been a member of several professional and advocacy bodies working on human rights and bills of rights issues.

Leslie Holmes is Professor of Political Science at the University of Melbourne and Recurrent Visiting Professor at both the Graduate School for Social Research in Warsaw and the University of Bologna. He specialises in corruption and organised crime, recently with particular reference to human trafficking and people smuggling in Europe. His most recent books are Rotten States? Corruption, Post-Communism and Neoliberalism (Duke University Press, 2006), Communism: A Very Short Introduction (Oxford University Press, 2009) and the edited collection Terrorism, Organised Crime and Corruption: Networks and Linkages (Edward Elgar, 2007). He was President of the International Council for Central and East European Studies (ICCEES) 2000–2005, and of the Australasian Association for Communist and Post-Communist Studies (AACPCS) 2005–07. He has been a consultant to the World Bank, Transparency International and the Swiss government, and has been a Fellow of the Academy of the Social Sciences in Australia since 1995.
Susan Kneebone is a Professor of Law and Deputy Director of the Castan Centre for Human Rights Law at the Faculty of Law, Monash University, Victoria, Australia. Susan teaches Forced Migration and Human Rights, International Refugee Law and Practice, and Citizenship and Migration Law. She has organised several conferences and workshops on these issues, made submission to public enquiries and frequently handles media enquiries on these matters. She is the author of many articles on these topics and editor of The Refugees Convention 50 Years On: Globalisation and International Law (Ashgate, 2003) and, with F. Rawlings-Sanaei, New Regionalism and Asylum Seekers: Challenges Ahead (Berghahn, 2007). Susan was the initiator of and is a Chief Investigator on the Australian Research Council Linkage project ‘Australia’s Response to Trafficking in Women: A Model for the Regulation of Forced Migration in the Asia-Pacific Region?’ together with her colleagues Dr Julie Debeljak and Professor Bernadette McSherry and four collaborating organisations.

Zbigniew Lasocik is a graduate from Warsaw University Law School with an LLM, doctoral and post-doctoral degrees in law and criminology, and has an MA in Sociology from Warsaw University’s Institute of Crime Prevention and Rehabilitation. He is Professor of Criminology and Corrections. He serves as Dean of the Faculty of Law at Lazarski University in Warsaw, and as head of Warsaw University’s Human Trafficking Studies Center. He conducts numerous research projects and studies in criminology (violent crimes, policing, prison systems) and human rights (HR education, human trafficking). He has published several books and numerous articles on all of these topics. He has been a Visiting Fellow at the Human Rights Program at Harvard Law School, John Jay College of Criminal Justice in New York, the Center for the Study of Human Rights at Columbia University, the Swedish National Council for Crime Prevention and the Criminology Department of the London School of Economics. Prof. Lasocik is President of the Polish Section of the International Commission of Jurists, a Member of the Board of Directors of the International Senior Lawyers Project and a former Regional Director of the European Human Rights Foundation in Warsaw.

Kevin Leong is a graduate policy officer at the Department of the Prime Minister and Cabinet, Australia. He first undertook his research into Sweden’s anti-trafficking regime while a student at the University of Sydney, and completed the research as a summer research scholar at the Australian National University. He has worked variously as a research assistant for the Director of the National Europe Centre at the Australian National University, as a legal clerk at the Aboriginal Legal Service (NSW/ACT) Limited, and as a tutor at the University of Sydney.
Sanja Milivojevic is a Lecturer in Criminology and Policing Studies at the University of Western Sydney. She holds a BA and MA from Belgrade University Law School, and a PhD from Monash University, Victoria, Australia. Her research is in the field of sex trafficking in Serbia and Australia, with a particular focus on how victims of trafficking have been constructed in Serbian and Australian culture. She has worked with the Institute for Criminological and Sociological Research in Belgrade. Sanja was one of the founders of the Victimology Society of Serbia, and was instrumental in establishing the first Victim Support Service in the Balkan region. In 2001–02, she was a Public Interest Law Fellow at Columbia University Law School in New York City. In 2003, Sanja completed a World Society of Victimology postgraduate course in Dubrovnik, Croatia. She has participated in several international and domestic conferences, and has published a number of articles in both Serbian and English. Her most recent major publications are the co-authored books Trafficking in People in Serbia (OSCE, 2004) and, with Marie Segrave and Sharon Pickering, Sex Trafficking: International Context and Response (Willan, 2009).

Stephanie Schwandner-Sievers studied Balkan Studies and Social Anthropology at Berlin Free University (MA 1993) and has conducted long-term ethnographic fieldwork in Albania, Kosovo and among the Albanian diaspora since 1992 (last including background research, facilitated by OSCE/ODIHR, on the anti-trafficking efforts in Albania in 2008). From 1997 to 2003 she served the School of Slavonic and East European Studies (SSEES), University College London, as the first Alex Nash Fellow for Albanian Studies. She is currently Honorary Research Fellow at Roehampton University and an Honorary Research Associate at SSEES, and also teaches ‘The Anthropology of Eastern Europe’ for an international MA area studies programme, MIREES, at the University of Bologna. Her consultancy firm, Anthropology Applied Limited, has produced numerous reports for national and international courts and agencies, and she has published extensively on Albanian politics of representation and identity and the construction of tradition, gender, security, myth, memory, nationalism and transnationalism.

Marie Segrave is a lecturer in Criminology in the School of Political and Social Inquiry at Monash University, Victoria, Australia. She researches in a wide range of areas related to regulation, globalisation, exploitation, policing and criminalisation. Marie’s current research projects are focused on temporary migration and labour exploitation in Australia, people trafficking, women’s experiences of survival post-release from imprisonment in Victoria, and the police provision of victim support in Victoria. Marie has most recently completed Sex Trafficking: International Context and Response (Willan, 2009), with co-authors Sanja Milivojevic and Sharon Pickering – an analysis and critique of the design and implementation of national responses to people trafficking in Australia, Asia and Europe. Her most recent articles were published in Women's Studies International Forum (July–August 2009) and the Australian Journal of Human Rights (2009).

Olivera Simić is in her final year of a doctoral candidature in Law at the University of Melbourne, Australia. She graduated from Essex University, UK with a Masters in International Human Rights Law and a year later from the UN University for Peace, Costa Rica with an MA in Gender and Peacebuilding. Before enrolling in the PhD program, Ms Simić worked in different NGOs and international organizations such as UNICEF, OSCE and ICMPD. Her fields of interest are peacekeeping, peacebuilding, gender, international human rights and humanitarian law, trauma and reconciliation. She has taught in Bosnia Herzegovina, Serbia and Australia and held awards for postgraduate studies in the UK, Costa Rica and Australia. Olivera has participated and presented her work at a number of international and domestic conferences and has published in Europe, the USA and Australia.

Sallie Yea is a Visiting Fellow in the Department of Geography, National University of Singapore. She gained her PhD in Human Geography from Monash University in 2000. She has been conducting research in the field of human trafficking since the early 2000s, focusing her research mainly on trafficking for marriage and for prostitution in Asia. She has published widely on the subject, including papers in Women’s Studies International Forum, Asian and Pacific Migration Journal and Singapore Journal of Tropical Geography. She is currently conducting research into human trafficking and the commercial sexual exploitation of children in Singapore and surrounding Indonesian territories.