Contributors

Sharon Bessell has worked on children's issues as a researcher, policy analyst, consultant and activist for over 15 years, working in Australia, Indonesia, the Philippines and Fiji. Sharon has a particular interest in rights-based policy for children identified as 'at risk' or 'vulnerable' and is currently a Senior Lecturer at the Crawford School of Economics and Government, at The Australian National University.

Anna Boucher is a Lecturer in the Department of Government at the University of Sydney and a Research Fellow of the Migration Studies Unit at the London School of Economics and Political Science. Earlier work on gender-based analysis in Australia and Canada, published in the Australian Journal of Political Science, was awarded the 2006 Australasian Political Science Association Women and Politics Prize.

Daniel Clegg is a Lecturer in Social Policy in the School of Social and Political Science at the University of Edinburgh. His principal research interests are the comparative politics of social and labour market policy and the welfare state in France. Daniel is a member of the executive committee of RECWOWE (Reconciling Work and Welfare in Europe), a Network of Excellence under EU FP6.

Lisa Conant is an Associate Professor and Chair in the Department of Political Science at the University of Denver specialising in the comparative study of law and society. Her current research interests concentrate on transformations in the rights and obligations of citizenship that derive from European Union law and the European Convention on Human Rights.

Irene Dingeldey is a Senior Researcher in the Institute of Labour and Economy at the University of Bremen. Earlier work on European tax systems and family employment patterns has been widely cited. More recent work deals with welfare state transformation and governance of labour market policy.

Susan Harris Rimmer is a solicitor, human rights advocate and researcher in the Centre for International Governance and Justice at The Australian National University. Her recent research interests centre around transitional justice in post-conflict societies and she has done extensive work in this area with women in East Timor.
Contributors

Ilan Katz is a Professor and Director of the Social Policy Research Centre at the University of New South Wales. He has researched extensively in the areas of children, families and communities, race and ethnicity, disability, social exclusion and comparative social policy.

Arnlaug Leira is a Full Professor of Sociology in the Department of Sociology and Human Geography at the University of Oslo. Arnlaug has published extensively on family change and welfare state policy reform in Scandinavia, gender and work and care, as well as gender and citizenship in modern welfare states.

Neil Lunt is a Senior Lecturer in Public Sector Policy and Management at the University of York. His research interests include welfare policy, with particular expertise in the New Zealand experience, the delivery and management of health and social services, and the role of research within policy and practice.

Alan Morris is a Senior Lecturer in the School of Social Sciences and International Studies at the University of New South Wales and joint editor of the Australian Journal of Human Rights. Alan has published extensively on a range of social policy issues, most recently focusing on the impact of different housing tenures on the life circumstances of older people.

Ann Nevile has worked as a policy practitioner and academic and is currently a Senior Lecturer and Director of the Social Policy Action Research Centre, Crawford School of Economics and Government at The Australian National University. Her research work combines theory and practice, often in innovative ways, in order to better explain complex policy environments. Most recent work focuses on values and rights-based approaches, and values and the legitimacy of third sector organisations.