

Contributors

James Bachmeier is a PhD candidate in the Department of Sociology and a Research Associate in the Center for Research on Immigration, Population and Public Policy at the University of California, Irvine. His research focuses on the migration and labour market incorporation of Mexican immigrants to the US, as well as on the implications of large-scale immigration for patterns of US racial and ethnic stratification.

Frank D. Bean is the Director of the Center for Research on Immigration, Population and Public Policy at the University of California, Irvine (UCI). Prior to joining the UCI faculty, Bean served as Ashbel Smith Professor of Sociology and Public Affairs, Director of the Population Research Center and Chair of the Department of Sociology at the University of Texas at Austin. He was also the Founding Director of both the Program for Research on Immigration Policy and the Population Studies Center at the Urban Institute in Washington, DC. His current research focuses on the estimation of the size and type of immigrant flows, racial/ethnic relations in the US, and the interconnections among cultural repertoires, citizenship and immigrant group incorporation among US Mexican immigrants and their descendants.

Santina Bertone is an Associate Dean (Research and Research Training) in the Faculty of Business and Law at Victoria University. She has been actively researching in the area of immigration and work since the 1990s. She led the Workplace Studies Centre for over a decade, winning a wide range of grants and publishing books and articles on immigrant women, industrial restructuring, migrants and trade unions, productive diversity and equal employment opportunity. She also spent many years representing migrants as part of the Ethnic Communities Council of Victoria, and has had a range of other community and government board roles. Bertone recently participated in the Australia 2020 Summit and retains a keen interest in policy issues.

Bob Birrell is Reader in Sociology at Monash University. He has a degree in economics from Melbourne University, in history from the University of London and a PhD in sociology from Princeton University. He has acted as an adviser on immigration issues to both Labor and Coalition governments in Australia. He is joint editor (with Katharine Betts) of the quarterly demographic journal People and Place, published by Centre for Population and Urban Research (CPUR). The CPUR consults on demographic issues with industry and government partners. It is currently preparing the background analysis on the demand and supply for university graduates for the Review of Higher Education in Australia.

Susan K. Brown is Associate Professor of sociology and an affiliate of the Center for Research in Immigration, Population and Public Policy at the University of California, Irvine. She is the author of Beyond the Immigrant Enclave: Network Change and Assimilation (2004). Her research focuses on the incorporation of immigrants to the US, residential segregation and inequality of access to higher education.

Brian Duncan is an Associate Professor of Economics at the University of Colorado, Denver. His research focuses on the economics of generosity, specifically examining the often conflicting motives individuals have for contributing to charitable causes. Duncan has also written on the economic incentives of foster care and adoption, and on the intergenerational progress of the descendants of Mexican immigrants. He holds a PhD in economics from the University of California, Santa Barbara.

Gary P. Freeman is Chair of the Department of Government, University of Texas at Austin. He specializes in the politics of immigration, comparative social policy and politics in Western democracies. His most recent writing has been directed at understanding the form of immigration politics in different countries and explaining the integration strategies employed by countries as they grapple with immigrant populations. He is currently working on the question of the linkage between immigration and the welfare state, especially the impact of ethnic and other forms of diversity on the solidaristic foundations of social policies.

John Higley's interests are comparative politics and political sociology, especially the comparative study of political elites and political regimes. As Director of the Center for Australian and New Zealand Studies at the University of Texas at Austin, he also works on various policy issues in those countries and on their trade and other relations with the US. He has written extensively about elites and elite theory in contemporary social science, including a book titled Elites in Australia (1979). Since 2001 he has served as Chair of the Research Committee on Political Elites of the International Political Science Association. His most recent book is Elite Foundations of Liberal Democracy (2006).

Graeme Hugo is University Professorial Research Fellow, Professor of the Department of Geographical and Environmental Studies and Director of the National Centre for Social Applications of Geographic Information Systems at the University of Adelaide. His research interests are population issues in Australia and South-East Asia, especially migration. He is the author of over 300 books, articles in scholarly journals and chapters in books, as well as a large number of conference papers and reports. In 2002 he secured an Australian Research Council Federation Fellowship over five years for his research project, 'The new paradigm of international migration to and from Australia: dimensions, causes and implications'. He has recently completed reports on migration and development for the Australian government and for the Asian Development Bank.

Andrew Jakubowicz is Professor of Sociology at the University of Technology, Sydney, Director of the Cosmopolitan Civil Societies Research Centre and Head of the Social and Political Change Academic Group. His research interests cover globalization and intercultural relations, new media and cultural interaction. He was the Foundation Director of the Centre for Multicultural Studies at the University of Wollongong and historical adviser to a number of exhibitions, including the Jewish communities of Shanghai at the Sydney Jewish Museum (2001–02), the National Maritime Museum (2001–03) and the national travelling exhibition, 'Crossroads: Shanghai and the Jews of China' (2002–03).

James Jupp is the Director of the Centre for Immigration and Multicultural Studies in the Australian Demographic and Social Research Institute at the Australian National University. He was general editor of the Bicentennial Encyclopedia of the Australian People from 1984 until its publication as The Australian People in September 1988, and of the second edition published for the Centenary of Federation in 2001. He has published widely on immigration and multicultural affairs, including From White Australia to Woomera (2002), The English in Australia (2004) and Social Cohesion in Australia (2007).

David L. Leal is an Associate Professor in the Department of Government at the University of Texas at Austin and holds a PhD from Harvard University. He is a Faculty Associate of the Center for Mexican-American Studies and Director of the Public Policy Institute. His primary academic interest is Latino politics, and his work explores a variety of questions involving public opinion, public policy and political behaviour. He has published over 40 journal articles and book chapters on these and other topics.

Stine Neerup is a Research Fellow at the Monash Institute for the Study of Global Movements and a PhD fellow at the Centre for the Study of Equality and Multiculturalism at Copenhagen University. Her research focuses on the relation between immigration policy making and integration, and the impact of temporary labour migration on paths to citizenship, migrant participation and inclusion in the welfare state.

John Nieuwenhuysen is the Founding Director of the Monash Institute for the Study of Global Movements. In 2003 he received an award (AM) in the Order of Australia for service to the community through contributions to independent academic, public and private sector research, to debate on immigration, cultural diversity, equity, economic development, taxation, indigenous, labour and industry issues, and to reform of the liquor laws of Victoria.

Stephen J. Trejo is a labour economist at the University of Texas at Austin. He received his PhD in economics from the University of Chicago in 1988. His research focuses on public policy issues, including overtime pay regulation, the labour market experiences of immigrants and obstacles to the economic progress of minority groups. He joined the Institute for the Study of Labor (IZA) as a Research Fellow in August 2000 and has been a member of the American Economic Association Committee on the Status of Minority Groups in the Economics Profession (1998–2003) and a member of the National Academy of Sciences Panel to Study US Hispanics (2003–05). He is the author of numerous articles concerning the status and mobility of Mexican Americans in the US labour market.

Cara Wong is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Political Science at the University of Illinois, Urbana-Champaign. She holds a PhD in political science from the University of California, Berkeley. Her research interests include American government and politics, political psychology, race, ethnicity and politics. She has published numerous articles on racial and ethnic politics, voting behaviour, citizenship, social capital and multiculturalism.