Many people have made this book possible. First there is the Christian A. Johnson Foundation which has made it possible for me to do research outside the standard approach and to follow issues that are interesting. The Foundation's commitment to liberal arts education is unbending. Second, there is Middlebury College which, as a liberal arts college, encourages a wider range of research than most universities do. Together, they made this project possible.

Once I decided to do the project, I relied heavily on friends and contacts at various universities throughout Europe for information and help in distributing the questionnaire and reminding students to fill it out. The leadership of the EDP (European Doctoral Program) and ENTER (European Network for Training in Economic Research) consortiums were especially helpful as were the department chairs and department administrators at the various schools. I thank them all.

A non inclusive list of some of the people who were especially helpful include Marta Araque, Angela Baldassarre, Emanuela Boem, Amelie Constant, Jacques Dreze, Vincenzo Galasso, Fabrizio Germano, Andreas Haufler, Omar Licandro, David Madden, Patrick Pintus, John Sutton, Shlomo Weber, Philippe Weil, and Mark Wilbor. I thank them all, along with many others who helped, but whose name I, unfortunately, did not record. I would also like to thank Kyklos where the information in Chapter 2 was first presented in a 2008 article entitled "The Making of a European Economist" (Kyklos, 61(2)). It is used with permission.

Having collected all the material, I had to analyze it, transcribe the interviews and edit all the material. A number of people at Middlebury College helped me in this and I would especially like to thank Helen Reiff, who helped with editing the interviews, and Jessica Weise who helped with analyzing data.

After I put the manuscript together, I turned it over to the people at Edward Elgar who did a masterful job of transforming it into a final manuscript. I would especially like to thank Jo Betteridge and Suzanne Mursell.

Finally, and most of all, I want to thank the graduate economics students at all the schools for filling out the survey and for agreeing to be interviewed. This is their story.
