This book owes its genesis to the conference ‘Objective Values, No Values and Subjective Values: The Ethical Bases of Market and State’, held in December 2006 at the Faculty of Economics of Sapienza University of Rome, Italy, organized by the European Center for the Study of Public Choice (ECSPC) as a key part of the centennial celebrations of the Faculty of Economics.

The conference served as the impetus for part of this volume. In fact, the selection of chapters has been enriched with five chapters by scholars who did not attend the conference, but shared an interest in the topic. To our friends and colleagues who have helped make this a more comprehensive book, we are deeply grateful.

The conference and this book would not have been possible without the financial support that the ECSPC received from Open House Investment Service, BancApulia, the Faculty of Economics and the Department of Public Economics of Sapienza University of Rome.

We have been very fortunate having the services of Maria Delle Grotti, permanent secretary to the ECSPC, who has managed to do the donkey work during the publication of this book. We are deeply grateful to her.

These acknowledgements would not be complete without recording our grateful thanks to the Edward Elgar editorial staff. Specifically we would like to mention Elizabeth Clack, Matthew Pitman and Laura Seward.
