Much of the work we have done took place at the University of Ferrara, situated in the heart of one of the most fascinating Italian Renaissance towns. The other location for our discussions and research has been the UCLA campus and the city of Los Angeles. Thus, although this book is definitively the result of extensive joint work, a possible attribution by chapter is as follows: Marco Di Tommaso has primarily contributed to Chapters 1, 2, 3, 4 and Stuart Schweitzer to Chapters 5, 6 and 7. We have equally contributed to the final version of Chapter 8.

We specifically express our gratitude to our colleagues Laretta Rubini and Elisa Barbieri for many helpful comments during our work. Special thanks go also to Cristina Iordan and Silvia Podetti and to a long list of PhD students enrolled in Ferrara for their always stimulating questions and comments. In addition, the project benefited greatly from four skilled research assistants who helped us with our research: Karleen Giannitrapani, Mattia Tassinari, Ben Hackner, and Lucia Bazzucchi.
