

Acknowledgments

Conceptualizing, writing, editing and revising this book involved over four years of work. During that time the assistance, critiquing and encouragement of colleagues and family members have been essential. David Brokensha, Elizabeth Colson, John Gay and David McDowell have not only critiqued the content of every chapter but also provided editorial comments and advice on writing style. Joseph Jorgensen would have done the same if not for his untimely death on 5 March 2008. Robert Bates, Harald Frederiksen, Robert Goodland and Burt Singer provided encouragement when I most needed it and critiqued key sections. Michael Clemens, Jean Ensminger, Philip T. Hoffman, Charles W. Howe, Lee Talbot and Susan Wood provided advice during the early days of conceptualization. Elizabeth Colson, Lisa Cliggett and Jairos Mazambani updated me from the field on Zambia and the Gwembe Tonga. Eliza, my wife of 60 years, provided necessary encouragement when the task grew too onerous, while daughters Eliza Scudder and Alice Thayer Scudder maintained interest and provided encouragement as the years went by. Son-in-law John Williamson spent hours listening to me and passed on relevant information.

I am especially indebted to Alex Pettifer, who was willing to take the risk and responsibility for publishing this work. My thanks go also to Jenny Wilcox and Elizabeth Clack. Sara Lippincott provided early editorial advice, as more recently did Roby Harrison, Donald S. Lamm and Rob West. The Government of Laos with the Nam Theun Power Company, Carine Petit and Erik Lambin provided the remote sensing images. At Caltech, Victoria Mason helped edit and protected the manuscript as it grew, even taking it home with her for safe keeping.

