Contributors

Jutta Brunnée holds the Metcalf Chair in Environmental Law and is the Associate Dean (Graduate) in the Faculty of Law at the University of Toronto. She has participated in numerous Canadian and international initiatives related to environmental issues. Jutta’s most recent book, co-authored with S.J. Toope, is Legitimacy and Legality in International Law: An Interactional Account (Cambridge University Press, 2010).

Marie-Claire Cordonier Segger is Director of the Centre for International Sustainable Development Law (CISDL) in Montreal, Canada. She is a Fellow of the Lauterpacht Centre for International Law at the University of Cambridge and serves on the World Future Council. Marie-Claire’s scholarship addresses sustainable development law and policy.

Emily Crawford is a post-doctoral fellow and associate at the Sydney Centre for International Law (SCIL). She is the author of The Treatment of Combatants and Insurgents under the Law of Armed Conflict (Oxford University Press, 2010). Emily’s current research looks at major developments in the conduct of armed conflicts in the 21st century, including cyber warfare and targeted assassinations.

Alice Edwards is Senior Legal Coordinator and Chief of the Protection Policy and Legal Advice Section within the Division of International Protection at the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees in Geneva. She is a Research Associate at the Refugee Studies Centre, Oxford, Research Fellow of St Anne’s College, Oxford and a Fellow of the University of Nottingham’s Human Rights Law Centre. Alice’s publications include Violence against Women under International Human Rights Law (Cambridge University Press, 2011) and (ed.) Human Security and Non-Citizens (Cambridge University Press, 2010).

Markus W. Gehring is University Lecturer in International Law at the Centre of International Studies and Fellow in Law at Robinson College, University of Cambridge. He holds an ad personam Jean Monnet Chair in Sustainable Development Law at the University of Ottawa in Canada. His publications include World Trade Law in Practice (Globe Publishing, 2007). and, together with Marie-Claire Cordonier Segger and Andrew Newcombe, (eds), Sustainable Development in World Investment Law (Kluwer Law International, 2010).

Christine Gray is Professor of International Law at the University of Cambridge. She is a member of the editorial board of several journals, including the British Yearbook of International Law, the European Journal of International Law and the International and Comparative Law Quarterly. Christine has written extensively on the use of force and her main work in this area is International Law and the Use of Force (Oxford University Press), now in its third edition.

Jarrod Hepburn is an Associate Fellow with the Centre for International Sustainable Development Law. He is currently a candidate for the DPhil in Law at Balliol College, University of Oxford, working on issues of international investment law and its intersections with human rights law. Jarrod is admitted to practice in Australian federal and state jurisdictions.

Ellen Hey is Professor of Public International Law and Head of the Department at the Erasmus School of Law, Rotterdam. She is a member of the Aarhus Compliance Committee. She is editor, together with Jutta Brunnée and Daniel Bodansky of the Oxford Handbook on International Environmental Law (Oxford University Press, 2007). Ellen’s research interests include international institutional law, in particular the accountability of international organizations, and international natural resources law, on which she has published widely.

Karen Hulme is Senior Lecturer in the School of Law at the University of Essex. Her publications include War Torn Environment: Interpreting the Legal Threshold (Martinus Nijhoff, 2004). Karen’s current research interests include international humanitarian law and climate change and human rights and the environment, including governance issues surrounding climate change, adaptation and resilience.

Stephen Humphreys is Lecturer in International Law at the London School of Economics. His research interests include rule of law promotion; law and development; climate change; international legal theory; law and war; and the allocation of risk in transnational legal processes. Stephen’s publications include Theatre of the Rule of Law (Cambridge University Press, 2010) and the edited volume, Human Rights and Climate Change (Cambridge University Press, 2009).
Contributors

René Lefeber is Professor of International Environmental Law in the Faculty of Law, University of Amsterdam and Legal Counsel at the International Law Division, Netherlands Ministry of Foreign Affairs. He advises the Netherlands Government on international law and represents the Netherlands in intergovernmental negotiations. René’s research focuses on liability for environmental damage, compliance with international environmental law and the sustainable management of international areas.

Francis Lyall, now Emeritus, held the Chair of Public Law at the University of Aberdeen from 1974 to 2005 and continued part-time from 2006 to 2010. He is the author (with P.B. Larsen) of Space Law: A Treatise (Ashgate, 2009) and of International Communications: The International Telecommunication Union and the Universal Postal Union (Ashgate, 2011). He also writes on church and state, on theology, on environmental law and on legal history.

Andria Naudé Fourie is an Assistant Professor in Public International Law in the Erasmus School of Law at Erasmus University, Rotterdam. She is also Managing Editor of the Erasmus Law Review. Andria is the author of The World Bank Inspection Panel and Quasi-Judicial Oversight: In Search of the ‘Judicial Spirit’ in Public International Law (Eleven International Publishing, 2009).

Hari M. Osofsky is an Associate Professor at the University of Minnesota Law School as well as an adjunct Associate Professor of Geography and the Associate Director of Law, Geography, and Environment with the Consortium on Law and Values in Health, Environment and the Life Sciences. Her advocacy work has included assisting with the Inuit Circumpolar Conference’s petition on climate change to the Inter-American Commission on Human Rights. Together with William C.J. Burns, she co-edited Adjudicating Climate Change: State, National, and International Approaches (Cambridge University Press, 2009).

Rosemary Rayfuse is Professor of International Law in the Faculty of Law at The University of New South Wales and conjoint Professor of International Environmental Law at the Faculty of Law, Lund University, Sweden. Her publications include Non-Flag State Enforcement in High Seas Fisheries (Martinus Nijhoff, 2004). Her research focuses on public international law, law of the sea and international environmental law, in particular, oceans governance and protection of the marine environment in areas beyond national jurisdiction as well as the normative aspects of climate change.
International law in the era of climate change

Catherine Redgwell is Professor of International Law and Vice-Dean for External Relations at University College London, Faculty of Laws. In addition to having served on the editorial advisory boards of a number of scholarly journals, she is presently joint general editor of the International and Comparative Law Quarterly. Her teaching and research interests include public international law, international environmental law, law of the sea, natural resources and energy law, and treaty law.

Shirley V. Scott is Associate Professor of International Relations in the School of Social Sciences at The University of New South Wales. She has published extensively on aspects of the interaction between international law and world politics. Shirley’s recent books include International Law in World Politics (2nd ed., Lynne Rienner, 2010) and International Law, US Power: The United States Quest for Legal Security (Cambridge University Press, 2012).