

Contributors

Majid Al-Haj is Vice President and Dean of Research at the University of Haifa, Israel, where he is Professor of Sociology and head of the Center for Multiculturalism and Educational Research. Majid Al-Haj received his doctorate from the Hebrew University of Jerusalem and pursued post-doctoral studies at Brown University, Providence, RI, USA. His most recent work focuses on education and multiculturalism in Israel and the impact of Russian immigrants on Israeli culture and ethnic politics. He has published extensively on the social and political structure of the Palestinians in Israel, Palestinian refugees, immigration in Israel, and freedom of expression. Recent publications include Immigration and Ethnic Formation in a Deeply Divided Society: The Case of the 1990s Immigrants from the Former Soviet Union in Israel (2004), Education among the Palestinians in Israel: Between Control and Culture of Silence (2006), and the co-edited Cultural Diversity and the Empowerment of Minorities: The Israeli and the German Cases (2007).

Karin Amit is the Academic Committee Coordinator at the Institute of Immigration and Social Integration and a senior lecturer in the Department of Business Administration at Ruppin Academic Center, Israel. She received her PhD from Tel Aviv University, Israel. Her research interests include immigration and leadership and she is a member of the Metropolis International Steering Committee.

Olena Bagno is a Neubauer Fellow at the Institute for National Security Studies at Tel Aviv University and a post-doctoral fellow in the Department of Political Science at Stanford University, USA. She completed her PhD dissertation in the Department of Political Science at Tel Aviv University, Israel. Her research interests focus on immigration, politics, security and civil society.

Allan Borowski is Professor of Social Work and Social Policy at La Trobe University, Melbourne, Australia. He obtained his doctorate in 1980 from Brandeis University, Waltham, MA, USA. Upon completion of his PhD he worked in Canada as a senior policy analyst with the Province of Ontario's Ministry of Community and Social Services; he has also held positions as Research Manager of the Australian government's Bureau of Immigration, Multicultural and Population Research, as Chair in Social Work at The University of New South Wales, Australia, and in The Hebrew University of Jerusalem's Paul Baerwald School of Social Work. He has served as a consultant to a variety of public and non-profit organizations in the United States, Israel, Indonesia and Australia and was a visiting professor at universities in Israel, England, Hong Kong, Canada and Sweden. He was elected a Fellow of the Gerontological Society of America in 1997 and of the Academy of the Social Sciences in Australia in 2006. Borowski has produced over 100 publications, including the co-edited Immigration and Refugee Policy: Australia and Canada Compared (1994) and Longevity and Social Change in Australia (2007).

Na'ama Carmi is a teacher in the faculty of law at the University of Haifa, Israel. Carmi is a member of the National Privacy Protection Council. She has also served on The National Committee for Social Sciences (2002–05) and was Chairperson of the Association for Civil Rights in Israel (2001–02). Carmi's publications include The Law of Return: Immigration Rights and their Limits, Tel-Aviv University Press (2003, in Hebrew).

Anne Daly is Associate Professor of Economics at the University of Canberra, Australia, and holds a PhD in Economics from the Australian National University, Canberra. Her thesis compared age-earnings profiles for men and women in Australia, Great Britain and the United States. She currently teaches Microeconomics and Labour Economics at the University of Canberra. She has considerable experience in working in interdisciplinary research teams on such topics as the position of Indigenous Australians in the labour market, women in the workforce and the relationship with the welfare system, and transitions between education and working life for young people. She has maintained a research interest in international comparisons of labour market outcomes and her work has recently been published in the Australian Review of Public Affairs and the Economic Record.

Sergio DellaPergola is one of the world's leading demographers and a specialist in world Jewry. A former Chairman and Professor of Population Studies at the Hebrew University of Jerusalem, he now holds the Shlomo Argov Chair in Israel-Diaspora Relations at the university. DellaPergola is also a senior fellow at the Jewish People Policy Planning Institute, an independent think tank in Jerusalem. He has published numerous books and hundreds of papers on topics including Jewish identification and population projections in the diaspora and Israel. Recent publications include the co-edited Jewish Inter-marriage Around the World (2009) and Papers in Jewish Demography (series).

Yitchak Haberfeld is Associate Professor of Labour Studies at Tel Aviv University, Israel. His research areas include economic assimilation of immigrants, gender, ethnic and racial-based earnings differentials, and industrial relations systems. He has published extensively on the status of immigrants in the labour market. His work has been recently published in the European Sociological Review, Demography and Work and Occupations.

Andrew Jakubowicz is Professor of Sociology and Co-director of the Cosmopolitan Civil Societies Research Centre at the University of Technology, Sydney, Australia. He has undertaken research on the politics of cultural relations since the late 1960s. He has worked in the multicultural city of Bradford in the UK, and headed the Centre for Multicultural Studies at the University of Wollongong, Australia. He has published on the media, racism and cultural diversity, social policy and cultural diversity, and ethnic politics in Australia. He has a particular interest in the interrelationship between ideas about imperialism and the socio-political structures that emerge in post-colonial societies. As an educator he runs the award-winning website Making Multicultural Australia (<http://multiculturalaustralia.edu.au>) designed to use multimedia to engage with the widespread ramifications of cultural pluralism. Recent publications include entries in the Encyclopedia of Race Ethnicity and Society (2008) and the Encyclopedia of Religion in Australia (2009).

Siew-Ean Khoo is Senior Fellow in the Australian Demographic and Social Research Institute, Australian National University, Canberra, and is former Executive Director of the Australian Centre for Population Research at the Australian National University. A graduate of Harvard University, Cambridge, MA, USA, she has worked with the East-West Population Institute at the East-West Centre in Honolulu, HI, USA, and the Bureau of Immigration, Multicultural and Population Research in Australia. Her current research focuses on Australia's population and demography, particularly in relation to international migration and the settlement outcomes of immigrants and their children. She was the lead author of a study on Second Generation Australians that was commissioned and published by the Australian Government's Department of Immigration and Multicultural Affairs in 2002. Other published papers have examined intermarriage patterns, educational and occupational outcomes and language maintenance among the second generation in Australia. Recent journal articles have also included studies of skilled temporary migration to Australia, based on an Australian Research Council-funded research project in collaboration with the Department of Immigration. She is co-editor and contributing author of two recent books: The Transformation of Australia's Population: 1970–2030 (2003) and Public Policy and Immigrant Settlement (2006).

Susan Kneebone is Professor of Law and Deputy Director of the Castan Centre for Human Rights Law, Faculty of Law, Monash University, Melbourne, Australia. She teaches courses on Forced Migration and Human Rights, International Refugee Law, and Citizenship and Migration Law, which incorporates discussion of citizenship theory. She is the author of many articles on these issues and editor and co-editor of books which consider interdisciplinary and comparative perspectives, including The Refugees Convention 50 Years On: Globalisation and International Law (2003), New Regionalism and Asylum Seekers: Challenges Ahead (2007), and Refugees, Asylum Seekers and the Rule of Law: Comparative Perspectives (2009). She has made a number of submissions to public enquiries and frequently handles media enquiries on these issues, including a submission in 2007 on the legislation to introduce the citizenship test.

Andrew Markus holds the Pratt Foundation Research Professor of Jewish Civilisation in the Australian Centre for Jewish Civilisation, Monash University, Melbourne, Australia, and is a past Director of the Centre. He has researched Australian immigration and indigenous history and contemporary issues since the 1970s and currently heads four major research projects. These include an ongoing project measuring attitudes to immigration issues and social cohesion, an attitudinal study of the contemporary Jewish communities of Australia and a cross-generational study of Yiddish speaking immigrants and their descendants in Melbourne. He is the author or co-author of a number of books and reports, including Race: John Howard and the Remaking of Australia (2001), Mapping Social Cohesion: The Scanlon Foundation Surveys (2008, 2010) and Australia's Immigration Revolution (2009).

Rebeca Raijman is Associate Professor in the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at the University of Haifa, Israel. She received her PhD in Sociology from the University of Chicago, USA. Her research focuses on international migration (in Israel and the US) with special emphasis on migrants' modes of incorporation into host societies. She is currently conducting comprehensive research regarding the socio-political and religious organization of undocumented migrants' communities, the politics and policy of labour migration in Israel, and the social mechanisms underlying the emergence of prejudice and discrimination against subordinate ethnic minorities in modern societies. Her work has been recently published in Social Problems and the International Journal of Comparative Sociology.

Moshe Semyonov holds the Bernard and Audre Rapoport Chair in the Sociology of Labor at Tel Aviv University, Israel. He teaches in the Departments of Sociology and of Labor Studies, and is also Professor of Sociology at the University of Illinois at Chicago. He received his PhD in Sociology from the State University of New York at Stony Brook, USA. Semyonov's main research interests lie in the areas of labour market inequalities, labour migration in the global economy, and comparative social stratification. His current research focuses on structural sources of ethnic, gender and socio-economic inequality (mostly in the labour market) and on the status of labour migrants across societies. He is co-editor of Stratification in Israel: Class, Ethnicity and Gender (2004) and his work has recently been published in the American Sociological Review and Social Problems.

Haya Stier is Associate Professor of Sociology and Labor Studies at Tel Aviv University, Israel. She received her PhD from the University of Chicago, USA. She is conducting research in the areas of immigration, gender, family and social policy. She has published extensively in sociological journals on issues related to immigration, family and social policy, with recent publications in Research on Aging and the European Sociological Review.