This book relies on research carried out through financial support from the Ruben Rausing Foundation, the European Commission, VINNOVA (the Swedish Governmental Agency for Innovation Systems); Sigfrid och Walborg Nordkvist Foundation; Kungl. Fysiografiska Sällskapet and Trygghetsstiftelsen (the Job Security Foundation); the Danish Council for Strategic Research; and the BHI Foundation.

The author wishes to thank the following people: Bo Göransson, Gerd Johansson, Erik Andersson and the floorball team of the Department of Design Sciences in Lund for the good spirit; the Sønderborg Fire and Rescue Department for support; Sven-Eric Harjeskog for sharing his vast experience as a public procurer; Nina Widmark for the always sound reflections and the inspiration; Sue Arrowsmith for the legal aspects of public procurement and the encouraging attitude toward legal novices; Susana Borrás for encouragement; John Warrington for some nice discussions; the late Leif Hommen for supervision; Thomas Kaiserfeld for helping me finish my PhD thesis; Wendy Phillips and Elmer Bakker for being great people; Ben Matthews and Trine Heinemann for being role-model researchers; Luke Georghiou for starting the field of public procurement of innovation this time (and being the opponent for my PhD defence); Jacob Edler and Elvira Uyarra for many interesting discussions (when should we finish our common paper?); John Rigby for the reflections; Lena Tsipouri for being one of the good people; Patrick McCutcheon, Agnieszka Skonieczna, Bertrand Wert and Lieve Bos for the European perspective; Bo Balstrup, Jeppe Kristensen, Marie Louise Thomsen and Ole Helby Petersen for the Danish procurement perspective; Hans Hansen for outlining a work strategy; and Christian Clausen for helping me to understand Danish culture. Acknowledged is also the kind support (and patience) from Edward Elgar staff helping to finalise this book. There is also an array of people I have not mentioned, including all the people with expertise relevant to the public procurement of innovation whom I have met over the years: thank you.

This book is dedicated to Gösta Persson, who made it his trademark consistently to accept like a gentleman whatever joys and hardships his life brought about.
