Acknowledgements

Several people need to be acknowledged for their contributions to this book. First and foremost I would like to extend much gratitude to Dr Eglal Rached, Regional Director for the International Development Research Centre (IDRC) Middle East/North Africa Regional Office (MERO) and to Dr Rohinton Medhora, Vice-President Program and Partnership Branch, IDRC Ottawa for supporting this work, and to Dr Brent Herbert-Copley, former Director of Social and Economic Policy, IDRC, Ottawa, for encouraging the initiative. Secondly, special thanks go to Tamer El-Meehy, Entrust: Management & Development Consultants, who participated in fact-finding missions to Algeria, Jordan, Morocco, Syria and Yemen and drafted preliminary country reports, and to Sahar Zaki who assisted in the initial desktop reviews of private sector and small and medium enterprise developments in Iraq, Lebanon, Sudan, Tunisia, Turkey and the West Bank & Gaza, and drafted preliminary country profiles.

Dr Brent Herbert-Copley and Susan Joekes, Senior Program Specialist for IDRC’s Globalization, Growth and Poverty (GGP) programme in the Middle East/North Africa Office, provided input and advice on the evolution of the research project and the structure and content of the manuscript. Susan was particularly helpful with suggestions on drafts of the book and I am greatly appreciative of her analytical contributions. Bill Carman, IDRC’s Senior Communications Advisor, was extremely important to the project by facilitating discussions with Edward Elgar on the co-publishing arrangements, and is to be commended.

I would be remiss if I did not acknowledge the value of candid comments and suggestions from stakeholders who were consulted during country fact-finding missions, and their input on the validity of the preliminary diagnostic analysis of the economic and social challenges facing the MENA countries during IRDC-hosted regional workshops in 2007 and 2008.

Finally I would like to thank the editing and publishing team at Edward Elgar for their thorough and professional treatment during the process of preparing the manuscript for publication.
