I am eternally grateful to the students I have encountered in my various classes at the University of Tasmania. Without their trust and sense of adventure, this book would not have been possible. They have continually served as the source of my inspiration to explore the field of entrepreneurship education. More often than not I have been their student.

During my journey so far I have met many incredible educators who have shared many wonderful ideas with me and given me the motivation to further develop my own ideas. In a sense many of the ideas presented here have been co-authored by my current and past students and the many educators I have conversed with. To you all I sincerely say thank you. A special thanks to Dr Polly McGee for her valuable feedback on my earlier drafts.

Two colleagues in particular have greatly assisted my scholarly progress thus far. The first is Associate Professor Jack English, who took a chance recruiting me into academia without much more than a hunch to be guided by. The second is Professor Harry Matlay, who has supported the publication of my thoughts and ideas since the first time we met. We cannot travel far without the guidance and care of suitable mentors, and in that regard, I have been extremely fortunate.

This book is dedicated to several people. Firstly it is dedicated to my father David, who has always inspired me to believe that the things we dream of can indeed be created. Secondly, it is dedicated to Maureen Williamson, a wonderful educator who convinced me that we are all entitled to dream. Thirdly, this book is dedicated to all of my past, current and future students and to my entrepreneurship education colleagues scattered around the globe who also dare to dream. Lastly, it is dedicated to Kathryn, Natasha, Delsen and Turlican, who all endure my frequent time away from home as I attempt to explore and understand the global landscape of entrepreneurship education.
