Preface and acknowledgements

This book is based on the materials for a course called ‘Chinese Corporate and Securities Law’, which I started to teach at the Faculty of Law of the National University of Singapore in 2005. The materials were also used for the courses ‘Chinese Company Law’ and ‘Chinese Securities Regulation’, which I offered at the Chinese University of Hong Kong from 2006 to 2009. It was always a challenge to teach Chinese law, in English, to international students. Very soon, both my students and I figured out the need to have a text, in English, that not only offers a critical introduction to the fundamental principles and rules of China’s corporate law regime, but also put the rules in the contexts of China’s own legal, political, and economic systems. With this aim, I started to write this book in 2008, and finally completed it in November 2013. Most chapters of this book have already been used in my teaching, and I have been tremendously encouraged by the positive and constructive feedback from my students over the years. Indeed, my students have always been the major driving force behind the writing of this book.

This work would not have been possible without the generous support and encouragement of a lot of academic friends and institutions. Professor Tan Cheng Han, an internationally distinguished corporate law scholar who was also the former Dean of the Faculty of Law of the National University of Singapore, must be mentioned first as he was the person who strongly encouraged me to continue when I almost decided to give up this project in the belief that there was no international market for such a book. Professor David C. Donald of the Faculty of Law of the Chinese University of Hong Kong read most of the chapters of the book and provided invaluable comments that significantly improved both the language and analyses in this work.

I have also benefited from the collegial environments of the Faculties of Law of the National University of Singapore, the University of Hong Kong, the Chinese University of Hong Kong, and Tsinghua University. Especially, as the book has evolved over more than six years, I have benefited from discussions with many colleagues, including, among others, Ling Bing, Xi Chao, Zhang Xianchu, Yu Guanghua, Huang Hui, Lu Haitian, Zhu Ciyun, Shi Tiantao, Liu Junhai, Randall Peerenboom,
Company law in China

Finally, I am grateful for the financial support from a research grant in Singapore, the Academic Research Fund (R-241-000-086-112), provided through the Faculty of Law of the National University of Singapore, which made it possible for me to hire research assistants and travel to different places of the world to present several chapters of the book.