I am indebted to the families who told me about their lives with such openness and generosity. I would like to thank colleagues who were endlessly giving of their time and ideas to help me along the way, in particular Dr Caroline Gatrell, Dr Valerie Stead, Professor Mary Rose, Professor Sarah Jack and Dr Elaine Swan. Their support and help has been generous, in careful reading and commenting on earlier drafts of this book. More broadly they have provided ongoing inspiration with their own research and writing. My thanks go to all my colleagues in the Institute for Entrepreneurship and Enterprise Development at Lancaster University Management School who are remarkable and provide a unique environment in which to study entrepreneurship.

I would like to thank Ben Booth and all at Edward Elgar for their patience and exceptional professionalism. Thanks also to Val Turner who provided efficient and friendly proofreading in the final stages.

Finally, but most importantly, my thanks go to all my family for their support and encouragement over the years and all those conversations around the dinner table. A special thanks to John and Lizzie who inspired my interest in families in business across the generations and how they make their way in the world.
