This book is the result of a three-year joint project on transatlantic regulatory cooperation by the Centre on Institutions and Governance (at the University of California, Berkeley), the Leuven Centre for Global Governance Studies and the LICOS Centre for Institutions and Economic Performance (both at the University of Leuven). The first phase of the project was supported by the German Marshall Fund. The second part of the project was funded by the European Commission (Directorate-General for External Relations) within the framework of the pilot programme on Transatlantic Methods for Handling Global Challenges.

The project benefited from the insights and comments of various academics, policy-makers and analysts as well as stakeholder representatives who participated in project workshops and conferences: Jonathan Changus (California Assembly Staff), Jack Citrin (Institute of Governmental Studies, Berkeley), Ian Clark (European Commission), Christopher Cook (California Department of Justice), William Craven (California Senate Staff (Steinberg)), Peggy Harris (California Environmental Protection Agency), Bruce Jennings (Consultant to the California Senate Committee on Environmental Quality), Michael Kirschner (Design Chair Associates), Jacki Lopez (Center for Biological Diversity), Dan Pellisier (California Environmental Protection Agency), Cliff Rechtschaffen (California Department of Justice), Mark Schapiro (Center for Investigative Reporting), Sarah Skikne (The Climate Group), George Orbelian (San Francisco Global Trade Council), David Widawsky (National Center for Environmental Innovation), Joan E. Denton (Office of Environmental Health Hazard Assessment), Wally Baker (Greentech Foundation), Nicholas Hanley (European Commission), Sarahelen Thompson (Market and Trade Economics Division, Economic Research Service), Bill Freese (Center for Food Safety), Daniel Karanja (Partnership to Cut Hunger and Poverty in Africa), Christiane Gerstetter (Ecologic Institute), Michael Telson (National Laboratory Affairs, University of California, Washington Center), Tam M. Doduc (State Water Resources Control Board), Robert C. Wilkinson (Water Policy Program, University of California, Santa Barbara), Gerald Secundy (California Council for Environmental & Economic Balance), David Roland-Holst (University of California, Berkeley), Holmes Hummel (University of California, Berkeley), Steve Decanio (University of California, Santa Barbara), James Gollub (E-Cubed Institute), Hans Bruyninckx (University of Leuven), Ingmar von Homeyer (Ecologic Institute), Natalie Pauwels (European Commission), Bart Kerremans (University of Leuven), David Baldock (Institute for European Environmental Policy), Boris Barov (BirdLife International), Jorge Núñez Ferrer (Centre for European Policy Studies), Lucas Bergkamp (Hunton & Williams/Erasmus University Rotterdam), Astrid Schomaker (European Commission), Ethel Forsberg (Swedish Chemicals Agency), Pieter Depous (European Environmental Bureau), Eleni Kaditi (Centre for European Policy Studies), Frédérique Lorenzi (European Commission), Miet Maertens (University of Leuven), Elaine Meckenstock (University of California, Berkeley), Giulia Meloni (University of Leuven), Jorge Savio (European Commission), Jos Delbeke (European Commission) and Marc Vanheukelen (European Commission).

We also thank the staff of the German Marshall Fund, the European Commission, the University of Leuven and the University of California, Berkeley who were involved in the administration and management of the project: Lenka Stiburkova, David Denberg, Janeen Jackson, Anna Motschenbacher, Adam Smith, Axel Marx, Audrey Claeys, Anouk Deweerdt, Steven Sterkx, Michèle van Buggenum and Sofie Verbeek.

Finally, neither the project nor the publication of this the book would have been possible without the energetic and enthusiastic support of Heddy Riss, Program Director of the Center on Institutions and Governance at the University of California, Berkeley and Axel Marx, at the time of the project Research Coordinator at the Leuven Centre for Global Governance Studies, University of Leuven.
