

Contributors

John Harrison retired from the United Kingdom Department for International Development (DFID) in 2002 as a Senior Social Development adviser in the Caribbean. He worked in the region for over three decades serving in both DFID and the Caribbean Development Bank (CDB). He also worked as a consultant with the Inter-American Development Bank (IDB), UNICEF and the International Fund for Agricultural Development. He is the author of numerous official reports on socio-economic development in Caribbean countries and has written a number of articles on social analysis and development.

N. Jayaram is a sociologist and professor of research methodology at the Tata Institute of Social Sciences, Mumbai, India. He has taught sociology at Bangalore University and Goa University in India and the University of the West Indies, St Augustine, Trinidad. Although he specializes in the sociology of education, he has research interests in transdisciplinary areas including theory and methods, political sociology, and sociology of the India diaspora. His publications include: Introductory Sociology; Sociology: Methods and Theories; Sociology of Education in India; Social Conflict (co-edited with Satish Saberwal); The Indian Diaspora (ed.); On Civil Society: Issues and Perspectives (ed.); Footprints of Development and Change: Essays in Memory of Professor VKRV Rao (co-edited with R.S. Deshpande). He edits Sociological Bulletin which is the Journal of the Indian Sociological Society.

Edwell Kaseke is a Professor of Social Work at the University of the Witwatersrand in Johannesburg, South Africa. He is a Zimbabwean citizen and studied at the University of Zimbabwe and the London School of Economics. Prior to joining the University of the Witwatersrand, he was the Director of the School of Social Work at the University of Zimbabwe from 1989 to the beginning of 2009. He was, for many years, the Chairman of the Editorial Board of the Journal of Social Development in Africa which is published by the School of Social Work at the University of Zimbabwe. He has published widely on social policy, social development and social security issues. He is a member of the Core Group of Social Security Specialists in the Southern African Development Community (SADC).

Ruth Kattumuri is Co-Director of the Asia Research Centre and the India Observatory at the London School of Economics (LSE). She is responsible for developing multi-disciplinary research and programmes of the Asia Research Centre and the India Observatory. Her current research is in higher education, growth and inclusion, and climate change. She is interested in population and development policy and has written reports and papers on HIV/AIDS, social inclusion and migration. She has consistently been involved in setting up new initiatives through her 25-year career with higher education institutions. She leads in developing new academic centres and administrative programmes and has been engaged in creating and developing international knowledge exchange and capacity building programmes. She is a Cambridge Commonwealth Fellow and advisor to various Educational Institutions in Asia. She was formerly senior lecturer in Statistics and Computer Science at Madras Christian College in India.

Joanna Lewis is a Lecturer in Imperial and African history at the London School of Economics, Department of International History. Previously she has lectured at SOAS, Durham, and Cambridge where she completed her PhD. Her book Empire State-Building: War and Welfare in Colonial Kenya was published in 2000 (Oxford, James Currey). Since then she has published on white settler rule in central Africa, the Mau Mau and the end of empire, the British press and the Colonial Office. She is currently researching a book on the death and memorialization of Dr David Livingstone. She is a regular reviewer on empire and Africa for the Times Higher Education Magazine.

James Midgley is the Harry and Riva Specht Professor of Public Social Services and Dean Emeritus at the University of California, Berkeley. Originally from South Africa, he studied at the University of Cape Town and the London School of Economics and held academic appointments at both universities before moving to the United States in 1985. He has published widely on issues of social development, social policy, social work and international social welfare. His major books include Professional Imperialism: Social Work in the Third World (Heinemann, 1981); Social Security, Inequality and the Third World (Wiley, 1984); Comparative Social Policy and the Third World (Harvester, 1987, with Stewart MacPherson); The Social Dimensions of Development: Social Policy and Planning in the Third World (Gower, 1989, with Margaret Hardiman); Social Development: The Developmental Perspective in Social Welfare (Sage, 1995); Social Welfare in Global Context (Sage, 1997); and Social Policy for Development (Sage, 2004, with Anthony Hall). He has also edited a number of books on social policy, international social welfare and social development. He holds Honorary Professorships at the University of Johannesburg in South Africa, Nihon Fukushi University in Japan and the Hong Kong Polytechnic University.

Leila Patel is Professor of Social Development Studies and Director of the Centre for Social Development in Africa at the University of Johannesburg, South Africa. She was previously the Deputy Vice Chancellor and Vice Principal of the University of the Witwatersrand, Johannesburg and the Director General for Social Welfare in the Mandela government after 1994. Her research on the Restructuring of Social Welfare Options for South Africa was published 1993 by Ravan Press. She authored the White Paper for Social Welfare (1997) and her most recent book is titled Social Welfare and Social Development in South Africa (published by Oxford University Press (Southern Africa)). She was editor of The Social Work Practitioner Researcher and currently leads a range of social development research projects relating to gender, social protection, poverty and livelihoods, children and youth development, and the transformation of social welfare.

David Piachaud has taught at the London School of Economics since 1970 and is now Professor of Social Policy and an Associate of the Centre for Analysis of Social Exclusion. He was Social Policy Adviser in the Prime Minister's Policy Unit (1974–79) and has been Consultant to the European Commission, the ILO and the OECD. He has written papers and books on children, poverty, social security, social exclusion and social policy. Recent publications include: Understanding Social Exclusion (Oxford University Press, 2002, edited with John Hills and Julian LeGrand); Poverty in Britain: The Impact of Government Policy since 1997 (Joseph Rowntree Foundation, 2003, with Holly Sutherland and Tom Sefton); One Hundred Years of Poverty and Policy (Joseph Rowntree Foundation, 2004, with Howard Glennerster, John Hills and Jo Webb); and Making Social Policy Work (Policy Press, 2007, edited with John Hills and Julian LeGrand). He was a member of the Fabian Commission on Life Chances and Child Poverty whose report is Narrowing the Gap (Fabian Society, 2006).

Kwong-leung Tang is Professor of Social Work and Director at the University of British Columbia, Canada. Between 2003 and 2008, he served as Chair and Professor of Social Work at the Department of Social Work, the Chinese University of Hong Kong. He is the recent co-editor of Social Policy and Poverty in East Asia: The Role of Social Security (Routledge, 2010) which provides an up-to-date discussion of the worsening problem of poverty in East Asia with a focus on the critical role of social policy. He is the author of Social Welfare Development in East Asia (Macmillan & St Martins Press, 2001) and Colonial State and Social Policy: Social Welfare Development in Hong Kong 1842–1997 (University Press of America, 1998). He has published numerous journal papers and research reports on the issues of international social policy, Asian welfare and poverty. His academic and research interests include East

Asian social welfare, social policy in Hong Kong, law and social policy, and social development.

Paul Smyth is Professor of Social Policy at the University of Melbourne, and General Manager of the Research & Policy Centre at the Brotherhood of St Laurence, Fitzroy, Australia. His principal research interest is the interrelationship of social and economic policy and he has also written widely on the role of the non-profit sector in Australia. His work on social inclusion has been especially influential in Australia. He has authored and co-edited eight books on Australian social policy and numerous journal articles. His books include: Australian Social Policy: The Keynesian Chapter (1994); Contesting the Australian Way (1998, co-edited with Bettina Cass); Social Policy and the Commonwealth: Prospects for Social Inclusion (2004, co-edited with C. Jones Finer); and Australian Social Policy: Understanding for Action (2010, co-edited with Alison McClelland).