About the author

Mireille Hildebrandt is a professor of ‘Smart Environments, Data Protection and the Rule of Law’ at the institute of Computing & Information Sciences (iCIS) at the Faculty of Science, Radboud University in Nijmegen, the Netherlands, where she teaches Law in Cyberspace to master students of computer science and collaborates with computer scientists in the Privacy & Identity Lab. She is also a research professor of ‘Technology Law and Law in Technology’ at the research group on Law, Science, Technology & Society studies (LSTS) at Vrije Universiteit Brussel, Belgium and affiliated as an associate professor at the department of ‘Jurisprudence’ at the Erasmus School of Law (ESL), Erasmus University Rotterdam (EUR), the Netherlands. Hildebrandt publishes widely on the nexus of law, philosophy and technology. She co-edited, for instance, Profiling the European Citizen. Cross-Disciplinary Perspectives (Springer 2008), together with Serge Gutwirth; Human Agency and Autonomic Computing (Routledge 2011) with Antoinette Rouvroy; Human Law and Computer Law (Springer 2013), together with Jeanne Gaakeer; and Privacy and Due Process (Routledge 2013) with Katja de Vries. See also her Berkeley Press website at http://works.bepress.com/mireille_hildebrandt/.