In March 2009, the ILO's Industrial and Employment Relations Department held a two-day technical seminar on the role of collective bargaining in a global economy at the ILO headquarters in Geneva. The objective of the seminar was to bring together ILO staff (from headquarters and the field) together with academic experts to assess the impact of collective bargaining on different outcomes and trends and developments in different regions. I am grateful to the participants of that seminar, both presenters and discussants, for an engaging and thought provoking discussion of the issues. Many of those contributions appear as chapters in this volume. I am also grateful to René Robert who assisted in organizing the seminar and ensuring the timely submission of papers and presentations.

I wish to thank Guiseppe Casale, then Director of the department, for initiating the project. I also wish to thank his successor Tayo Fashoyin, previously Director of the Industrial and Employment Relations Department for his comments and ongoing support for this work.

I would like to thank the Bureau for Workers' Activities (ACTRAV), in particular Verena Schmidt, Frank Hoffer and the Global Labour Union Research Network for permitting us to publish the contribution by Franz Traxler and Bernd Brandl (Chapter 9), an earlier version of which was published as GURN Working Paper No. 10, September 2009. Sadly and unexpectedly, Franz Traxler passed away in January 2010. His brilliant scholarship and generous guidance will continue to be a source of inspiration to those of us that work in the institutionalist tradition.

I wish to thank David Kucera, Sangheon Lee and Deirdre McCann for their valuable comments and suggestions at various stages. I also wish to thank Simon Bösenberg who provided invaluable research support in the final stages of the volume.

Finally, I wish to thank Charlotte Beauchamp from the ILO Publications Unit for her enthusiasm, patience and support and the two anonymous referees whose comments helped to improve the manuscript.
