Figures

4.1 Example of an extended value chain innovation process: the functional side (what was done) 78
4.2 Example of an extended value chain innovation process: the social side (who did it) 79
5.1 Pictures of the Environmental Innovation Unit, outside and inside 112
6.1 Nine business model building blocks and their relationships 125
8.1 The product–service continuum 182
8.2 The development from separate services to integrated solutions 184
10.1 Actors and roles in public services 236
10.2 The actors and their roles in the empirical case 241
11.1 Workshop process for initiating service innovations as a development cycle 262
13.1 Service blueprinting model used in this study 310
13.2 The set of 3D building materials, model building under way, and labels grouped into entities 314
13.3 The main stages and co-development methods in the case company’s innovation model 318
14.1 The degree to which the respondents of different nationalities evaluated the visit in the tourist office as a pleasant experience 333
14.2 The degree to which the respondents of different age groups were satisfied with the consideration of specific needs in the service encounter 334
14.3 The percentage of respondents asking for the 10 most requested types of information 334
14.4 The degree to which the respondents asking/not asking about cycling opportunities evaluated the visit in the tourist office as a pleasant experience 335
15.1 Profitability factors and ways to restructure services in each of them 353
15.2 World airlines annual profit/loss 2000–2009 358
16.1 A framework for user-based productization 381
16.2 Combining innovation and productization 388