

---

Contributors

---

Nick Allum is Professor of Sociology in the Department of Sociology at the University of Essex, UK. His research interests are in the areas of public understanding of science, social capital, and survey methodology.

Robert Andersen is Dean of Social Science at the University of Western Ontario and Distinguished Professor of Social Science at the University of Toronto, Canada. His general research interests are in political sociology, social stratification and applied statistics. His recent research explores how individual-level economic position – measured by social class or income – interacts with national economic conditions to influence a wide array of social and political attitudes and behaviours considered important to the health of liberal democracy, including tolerance, support for democracy, and civic participation.

Laila Bécares is a Research Fellow at the University of Manchester, UK. Her work examines the determinants of ethnic inequalities in health, with a focus on life course and neighbourhood effects. She is interested in understanding the pathways by which the racialization of people and places leads to socioeconomic and health inequalities.

Yanjie Bian is Professor of Sociology at the University of Minnesota, USA, and concurrently he is the Dean of the School of Humanities and Social Science and the Director of the Institute for Empirical Social Science Research at Xi'an Jiaotong University, China. He is currently leading his research team to conduct a new household survey on the changing roles of social networks in employment processes in Chinese cities.

Franz Buscha is a Principal Research Fellow at the Centre for Employment Research, University of Westminster, UK. His research interests include labour economics, education economics, applied econometrics and policy evaluation.

Cheng Cheng is a Lecturer in Sociology at the School of Humanities and Social Science at Xi'an Jiaotong University, China. His main research interests include social networks, social inequality, labour markets and education.

Rochelle R. Côté is a Postdoctoral Fellow with the Institute for Social Science Research at the University of Queensland, Australia. Her work currently focuses on the link between networks and successful urban indigenous business in Canada, the US and Australia. Her research interests include understanding the link between social tolerance and social networks, and how indigenous peoples negotiate culture and relationships across urban and reserve societies.

David Cutts is a Reader in Political Science at the University of Bath, UK. His main research interests focus on the role of geographical and contextual effects on political and civic behaviour. His specific areas of interest include political and civic engagement, party campaigning, electoral behaviour, social capital and methods for modelling political and civic behaviour.

Neli Demireva is a Lecturer in Sociology at Essex University, UK. She completed an MSc in Sociology and a DPhil in Sociology at St John's College at the University of Oxford. Her research interests include migration, inter-ethnic ties, social cohesion, ethnic penalties and multiculturalism. She has published in leading journals in the field: Sociology, Ethnic and Racial Studies, the Journal of Ethnic and Migration Studies, the International Journal of Comparative Sociology and has prepared several policy reports on issues of ethnicity and migration.

Fiona Devine is Professor of Sociology and Head of Manchester Business School, and previously Head of the School of Social Sciences and Head of the Department of Sociology, at Manchester University, UK. Her research interests are in class and stratification, work and employment and politics and participation. She is the author of several books and numerous articles. She is currently writing a book with colleagues arising from the BBC class survey, to be published by Penguin in 2015.

Jaswinder K. Dhillon is Professor of Education at the University of Worcester, UK. She teaches and supervises postgraduate and doctoral students and her research interests include qualitative research methods, social capital, inter-organizational partnerships and transnational education. She is particularly interested in the dynamic relationship between empirical data and theory building.

Luisa Donato holds a PhD in Comparative Social Research from the Università degli Studi di Torino (Italy) and the Universitat Pompeu Fabra of Barcelona, Spain. Currently she is a researcher at IRES – Istituto di Ricerche Economico Sociali del Piemonte, Italy. She works in the areas of education and social inequalities.

Bonnie H. Erickson is Professor of Sociology at the University of Toronto, Canada. Her central research topic is social networks. She studies how networks are related to cultural repertoires and to major forms of inequality (class, gender and ethnicity).

Jeremy Fiel is a doctoral candidate in Sociology at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, USA. His research focuses on aspects of social stratification and educational inequality, including the causes and consequences of school segregation and the role of social background in processes of child development and educational attainment.

John Field is Emeritus Professor of Lifelong Learning at the University of Stirling and Visiting Professor at the University of Warwick, UK. His research encompasses the social, historical and economic contexts of learning in adult life.

Edward Fieldhouse is Professor of Social and Political Science at the University of Manchester, UK. He is principal investigator of the Scientific Leadership Team of the 2015 British Election Study and is joint editor of the Journal of Elections, Public Opinion and Parties.

Adam Gamoran is the John D. MacArthur Professor Emeritus of Sociology and Educational Policy Studies at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, USA, and President of the William T. Grant Foundation, a philanthropic organization that supports research to improve the lives of young people. His current efforts focus on identifying ways to reduce inequality in education and youth development.

Alejandro García-Macías is Head of the Department of Communication at the Universidad Autónoma de Aguascalientes, Mexico, and Director of the Social and Personal Networks Lab. His research interests are focused on the emergence of economic enclaves in Mexico.

Dave Griffiths is a Lecturer in Quantitative Methods in the School of Applied Social Science, University of Stirling, UK. His research interests include the analysis of social relationships and social connections, studies into social reproduction and elite reproduction, and advances in social network analysis especially through the analysis of secondary datasets and historical datasets.

Anthony Heath is Professor of Sociology at the University of Manchester and Emeritus Professor of Sociology at the University of Oxford, UK. He is author of numerous books and articles on ethnic inequalities in education and the labour market, the sociology of national identity, and political attitudes and behaviour. His most recent book is The Political Integration of Ethnic Minorities in Britain (Oxford University Press, 2013), which was based on a nationally representative survey of the main British ethnic minorities.

Xianbi Huang is a Lecturer in Sociology at the School of Humanities and Social Sciences at La Trobe University, Australia. Her main research interests include social networks, social stratification, social well-being and comparative studies across countries.

Paul S. Lambert is Professor of Sociology in the School of Applied Social Science, University of Stirling, UK. His research interests include the measurement and analysis of social stratification, trends in social inequality, and methodological issues in the analysis of large-scale secondary datasets.

James Laurence is a Research Fellow at the University of Manchester, based at the Cathie Marsh Institute for Social Research (CMIST) and the Department of Sociology, UK. His current research explores how ethnic diversity, immigration and socioeconomic inequality contribute to the creation and dissolution of social capital, cohesion and inter-group relations.

Yaojun Li is Professor of Sociology in the Department of Sociology and the Cathie Marsh Institute for Social Research, Manchester University, UK. His research interests are in social mobility, social capital, and the socioeconomic integration of minority ethnic groups. He has published widely in these areas and has conducted research projects funded by academic and government agencies in Britain, the US, Australia, China and Qatar.

Miranda Lubbers is Ramon y Cajal Researcher at the Department of Social and Cultural Anthropology, Universitat Autònoma de Barcelona, and director of the research group 'Personal Networks and Communities' (egolab-GRAFO), Spain. Her research interests are in the areas of social network analysis, methodology, and migration and transnationalism. Currently, her main research concerns the dynamics of migrants' personal networks over the course of the migration trajectory.

José Luis Molina is Head of the Department of Social and Cultural Anthropology, Universitat Autònoma de Barcelona, Spain. His research interests include economic anthropology, personal networks, transnationalism, and migration. Currently he is developing his research in the field of entrepreneurship. He has conducted research in Latin America and South-East Europe.

James Nazroo is Professor of Sociology at the University of Manchester and Director of the ESRC Centre on Dynamics of Ethnicity (CoDE), UK. His research interests are in inequality, social justice and underlying processes of stratification, particularly ethnic inequalities in health. Central to this has been developing an understanding of the links between ethnicity, racism, class and inequality.

Judith Pampalona is PhD Fellow in the Department of Social and Cultural Anthropology, Universitat Autònoma de Barcelona, Spain. Her research interests are focused on immigrant entrepreneurs and their personal networks, especially in micro-state contexts.

Roger Patulny is a Lecturer at the University of Wollongong, Australia and is current co-convenor of the Australian Sociological Association (TASA) Thematic Group on the Sociology of Emotions and Affect (SEA). He has published widely on the topics of social capital, social inclusion and connection, social networks, volunteering and trust, and emotions.

Jorge Rodríguez Menés obtained his PhD in Sociology at Northwestern University, USA. He is currently an Assistant Professor in Sociology at the Universitat Pompeu Fabra of Barcelona, Spain. He has held several academic posts in the UK and the USA. He works in the fields of social inequalities, occupations and crime.

Mike Savage is Martin White Professor and Head of the Department of Sociology at the London School of Economics, UK, having previously been Professor at the universities of Manchester and York. He was the founding Director of the ESRC Centre for Research on Socio-Cultural Change (CRESC). His books include Culture, Class, Distinction (Routledge, 2008), and Identities and Social Change in Britain since 1940: The Politics of Method (Oxford University Press, 2010).

Megan Shoji is a researcher at Mathematica Policy Research, USA. Her research focuses on identifying mechanisms of racial/ethnic and socioeconomic stratification and areas of potential intervention, with an emphasis on how schools and other social institutions can support historically marginalized families and communities. She earned her PhD in Sociology from the University of Wisconsin-Madison.

Patrick Sturgis is Professor of Research Methodology in the Department of Social Statistics at the University of Southampton and Director of the Economic and Social Research Council (ESRC) funded UK National Centre for Research Methods (NCRM), UK.

Eric M. Uslaner is Professor of Government and Politics at the University of Maryland-College Park, USA. He is Senior Research Fellow, Southwest University of Political Science and Law, Chongqing, China and Honorary Professor of Political Science, University of Aarhus, Denmark. His books include The Moral Foundations of Trust, Corruption, Inequality, and the Rule of Law, and Segregation and Mistrust.

Hugo Valenzuela-García is a Lecturer in the Department of Social and Cultural Anthropology, Universitat Autònoma de Barcelona, Spain. Currently, his research interests include consumption, anthropology of work and entrepreneurship. He has conducted fieldwork in South Asia, Spain and Mexico.

Pieter-Paul Verhaeghe is Senior Researcher in the Department of Sociology at Ghent University in Belgium. In 2012 he obtained his PhD on the (re)producing role of social capital in social inequalities in health and labour market outcomes. His current research includes residential segregation, social and ethnic inequalities and social policies.

Wenbin Wang is an Associate Professor in the Sociology Department at the School of Philosophy and Society at Jilin University, China. His main research interests include social networks, social capital and economic sociology.

Alan Warde is Professor of Sociology at the University of Manchester, UK. His research interests include the sociology of consumption, the sociology of culture and the work of Pierre Bourdieu. He has conducted investigations into the operation and distribution of cultural and social capital in the UK and was involved in a major project on cultural capital and social exclusion in the 2000s.

Mark Western is Director of the Institute for Social Science Research and Professor of Sociology at the University of Queensland, Australia. He has research interests in social stratification and inequality, political sociology and quantitative research methods.

Lei Zhang is a doctoral candidate in the Department of Sociology, University of Minnesota, USA. He is a quantitative sociologist with research interests in social networks, social capital, organization study, labour markets in emerging economies, social stratification, and subjective well-being.

Li Zhang is an Assistant Professor in the Department of Social Work, Shanghai Business School, China. She earned her PhD from the Department of Sociology, Shanghai University. Her main research interests include social capital, social mobility and social trusts in China.

Wenhong Zhang is a Yangtze River Scholars Distinguished Professor of Sociology at the School of Sociology and Political Science, Shanghai University, China. His main research interests include macro and micro social network analysis, social capital, social stratification, social mobility and social inequality in contemporary China. His current research project is 'Social stratification, mobility and harmonious interaction of classes in China'.

